Welcome to Berkeley and the Eighth International Conference on Religion & Spirituality in Society.

My Common Ground Research Networks colleagues and I are so pleased you can join us.

Over more than three decades, Common Ground has given voice to many thousands of creative and scholarly speakers and authors—people with things to say about the world who are saying them to change the world.

We have a strong commitment to providing opportunities for such people to meet, share, and learn from each other. This conference brings together researchers, practitioners, and scholars from a wide range of disciplines who have a common interest in the themes and concerns of the Religion in Society Research Network. As a result, topics are broached from a variety of perspectives, interdisciplinary methods are applauded, and mutual respect and collaboration are encouraged. Meeting, we talk, learn, and get inspired.

We are excited to begin a new era. While conference inspiration may fade with time, Common Ground offers a means for keeping inspiration alive, CG Scholar, an online environment for knowledge working and learning. CG Scholar provides a “help economy” where peers are credited for their mutual contributions in the Religion in Society Research Network. We encourage all conference participants to explore CG Scholar—an internet venue for intellectual interaction and imagination.

In these and other ways, Common Ground extends the legacy of its first decades well into the twenty-first century—as an organization deeply engaged with the critical questions of our time, and as a media innovator, we are creating the spaces and technical conditions in which, collectively, we can discuss the role of religion and spirituality in society.

I am grateful to all of you for sharing your work at this conference. Additionally, I thank my Religion in Society Research Network colleagues Patricija Kirvaitis, Kimberly Kendall, and Hannah Werner, who have organized and produced this meeting with great dedication and expertise.

We wish you all the best for this conference, and we hope it will provide you every opportunity for dialogue with colleagues from around the corner and around the globe.

Best wishes,

Homer Stavely

Common Ground Research Networks
Our Mission
Common Ground Research Networks aims to enable all people to participate in creating collaborative knowledge and to share that knowledge with the greater world. Through our academic conferences, peer-reviewed journals and books, and innovative software, we build transformative research networks and provide platforms for meaningful interactions across diverse media.

Our Message
Heritage knowledge systems are characterized by vertical separations—of discipline, professional association, institution, and country. Common Ground identifies some of the pivotal ideas and challenges of our time and builds research networks that cut horizontally across legacy knowledge structures. Sustainability, diversity, learning, the future of the humanities, the nature of interdisciplinarity, the place of the arts in society, technology’s connections with knowledge, the changing role of the university—these are deeply important questions of our time which require interdisciplinary thinking, global conversations, and cross-institutional intellectual collaborations. Common Ground is a meeting place for these conversations, shared spaces in which differences can meet and safely connect—differences of perspective, experience, knowledge base, methodology, geographical or cultural origins, and institutional affiliation. We strive to create the places of intellectual interaction and imagination that our future deserves.

Our Media
Common Ground creates and supports research networks through a number of mechanisms and media. Annual conferences are held around the world to connect the global (the international delegates) with the local (academics, practitioners, and research network leaders from the host research network). Conference sessions include as many ways of speaking as possible to encourage each and every participant to engage, interact, and contribute. The journals and book imprints offer fully-refereed academic outlets for formalized knowledge, developed through innovative approaches to the processes of submission, peer review, and production. The Research Network also maintains an online presence—through presentations on our YouTube channel, quarterly email newsletters, as well as Facebook and Twitter feeds. And Common Ground’s own software, Scholar, offers a path-breaking platform for online discussions and networking, as well as for creating, reviewing, and disseminating text and multi-media works.
Religion in Society
Research Network

Exploring the role of religion and spirituality in society
This Research Network is brought together by a shared interest in the complex and subtle relationships between religion and society and the changing nature of spirituality. The research network interacts through an innovative, annual face-to-face conference, as well as year-round online relationships, a peer reviewed journal, and book imprint—exploring the affordances of the new digital media.

Conference
The conference is built upon four key features: Internationalism, Interdisciplinarity, Inclusiveness, and Interaction. Conference delegates include leaders in the field as well as emerging scholars, who travel to the conference from all corners of the globe and represent a broad range of disciplines and perspectives. A variety of presentation options and session types offer delegates multiple opportunities to engage, to discuss key issues in the field, and to build relationships with scholars from other cultures and disciplines.

Publishing
The Religion in Society Research Network enables members to publish through two media. First, research network members can enter a world of journal publication unlike the traditional academic publishing forums—a result of the responsive, non-hierarchical, and constructive nature of the peer review process. The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society provides a framework for double-blind peer review, enabling authors to publish into an academic journal of the highest standard. The second publication medium is through the book imprint, Religion in Society, publishing cutting edge books in print and electronic formats. Publication proposal and manuscript submissions are welcome.

Community
The research network offers several opportunities for ongoing communication among its members. Any member may upload video presentations based on scholarly work to the research network YouTube channel. Quarterly email newsletters contain updates on conference and publishing activities as well as broader news of interest. Join the conversations on Facebook and Twitter, or explore our new social media platform, Scholar.
Theme 1: Religious Foundations

- Religious values and aspirations
- Sacred sources: sites, narratives, texts
- Religious philosophies and philosophies of religion
- Theological sources and resources
- World sources: religious and secular cosmologies
- Creation accounts in science and religion
- World destinies: religious and secular eschatologies
- Reason and faith: congruencies and conflicts
- Traditional, modern, and postmodern orientations to religion
- Science and religion: congruencies and conflicts on the sources of design in the natural world
- Religious counterpoints: agnosticism, atheism, materialism, and secularism
- Religious prophets: their messages and their meanings
- Religiosity: measures, forms, and levels of religious commitment
- Religion and law
- Religion and commerce
- The natural, the human, and the supernatural
- Rites and sites of passage: birth, adulthood, marriage, death
- Medical ethics and bioethics
- Anthropologies, psychologies, and sociologies of religion

Theme 2: Religious Research network and Socialization

- Religious institutional governance
- Symbology in theory and practice
- Religious education and religion studies
- Religiously-based schools and religion in public schools
- Religion in ethnic, national, and racial identities
- Congregations and religious research network
- Media for religious messages
- Evangelism and conversion
- Ritual, rite, liturgy
- Prayer, contemplation, and meditation
- Meditation as healing and therapy
- Religious ‘ways of life’ and lifeworld practices
- Religious art and architecture
- Pilgrimage, tourism, and the search for spiritual meaning
- Religious leadership
Theme 3: Religious Commonalities and Differences

- Comparative studies of religion
- Monotheism, polytheism, and immanentist religions
- Indigenous or first nation spiritualities
- Inter-religious harmony
- Interfaith dialogue
- Religious diversity, tolerance, and understanding
- Religions in globalization
- Centrifugal and centripetal forces: difference and interdependence
- Denominationalism: tendencies to fracture and recombination
- Literal and metaphorical readings of sacred texts
- Religion, identity, and ethnicity
- Interreligious education
- The nation state and religious exceptionalism
- Religious dual belonging
- Ecumenicalism
- Interfaith dialogue and international interfaith organizations

Theme 4: The Politics of Religion

- Religion in politics and the politics of religion
- Modernity and religious frameworks
- Religious freedom in secular states
- Chaplaincies and the state
- Politics, society, and religion in religiously defined states
- Religious minorities and the state
- Social agendas for religion: sustainability, justice, peace
- Religious divisions and social conflicts
- Religiously inspired violence and non-violence
- Gender, sexuality, and religion
- Women, patriarchy, and the sacred feminine
- Religion as a source of research network cohesion or research network dissonance
- Terrorism, political extremism, and religion
- Religion and human security
- Religion and global ethics
- Religion and human rights
- Religion and reconciliation
- The future of religion
The Religion in Society Research Network sets out in its conference, journal, book imprint, and online research network, to describe, analyze, and interpret the role of religion in society. The research network’s intellectual project is neutral with respect to the agendas of particular religions or explicit counterpoints to religion such as agnosticism or atheism.

Not that religion or spirituality can, in their very nature, ever be neutral subjects of discussion. In fact, religion is one of the most interest-laden of all discussions. Religion supplies meanings-in-the-world, no less. Spirituality is an ultimate source of interest. Religion provides an account of human origins, responsibilities, and destinies. It sets out to explain the nature of being. And it creates a framework for interpreting human action according principles of good and evil.

Religion’s stance is not only interest-intensive. It is also transcendental. Religion strives to reach beyond the lifeworld, grasping deeper meanings that may not always be self-evident in the ordinariness of everyday experience. This much can be said of religion-in-general. As for religions-in-particular, the range is as wide as the cultural experiences of human species-being.

‘First nations’ or indigenous peoples practiced a broad range of immanentist religions, including variants of totemism, animism, nature worship, shamanism, and ancestor worship—perhaps, in one perspective, for as long as the one hundred thousand years or more of our existence as a species. Religion then was less a separate institutional, spatial, and temporal space than it became in subsequent moments of human history. Religious meanings were deeply and integrally layered into the material and social worlds, thus representing a belief in the pervasive immanence of spiritual powers in natural circumstances and human affairs.

From about five thousand years ago, religious modes take a radically new textual-narrative form in conjunction with parallel revolutions in agriculture, the domestication of animals, village or city dwelling, the invention of writing, and institutionalized economic class inequality. The new religions are rarely unequivocally monotheistic (monotheistic systems of deity mostly have multiple personalities and deified prophets or saints). Nor are they simply polytheistic (polytheistic systems of deity mostly have hierarchies of major and lesser deity). Their key features are the progressive solidification of religious expression into sacred texts, sanctified buildings, and the institutional formation of a class of priestly interpreters and intermediaries. The common modes of meaning of these second phase religions are even signified at times to the extent of sharing historic origins or exemplary persons and narratives.

Religious meanings take a third paradigmatic turn with the arrival of modernity. Or, more to the point, a new mode of spirituality emerges in a parallel universe of meaning alongside the persistence of the first two. For the first time in human history, modernity provides an alternative meaning system which is a-religious—based on mixes of the epistemes of science, civic law, economic progress, vernacular materialism, and human reason. At the same time, atheism and agnosticism emerge as engaged counterpoints to religion.

Religion, nevertheless, powerfully persists in forms characteristic of all three of these world-historic moments of meaning-ascription. Modern, liberal reinterpretations of second phase world religions recast sacred cosmologies as metaphorical, and not incompatible with science. They perform re-readings of sacred narratives in the light of modernity’s ethical aspirations such as for gender equality, human biomastery, non-violence, and material well-being for all. The shift is so profound that these modes of religiously themselves might be characterized as third phase.
Meanwhile, others insist on holding to the truths of second phase religiosity. In practice they do this by means of textual literalism, religious fundamentalism, and didactic religious education. The chasm between liberal and fundamentalist religiosity in modernity at times seems as great as that between religionists and anti-religionists. And to add an original layer to our contemporary complexity, first nation religions persist and at times thrive, while revivals of immanentist religion are found in ‘new age’ and other such spiritualities.

Today, the search for meaning-grounds can only be described as a scene of unprecedented pluralism. To this, we can react in several ways. We can adopt pluralism as a modern value and strive for shared meanings and harmony-in-difference on earth. Or we can regard pluralism as force undermining the integrity of religion and with it, the communal distinctiveness of specific religious ways of life—in this frame of reference pluralism is an aspect of modernity that should be resisted.
About
The Religion in Society Research Network is dedicated to the concept of independent, peer-led groups of scholars, researchers, and practitioners working together to build bodies of knowledge related to topics of critical importance to society at large. Focusing on the intersection of academia and social impact, the Religion in Society Research Network brings an interdisciplinary, international perspective to discussions of new developments in the field, including research, practice, policy, and teaching.

Membership Benefits
As a Religion in Society Research Network member you have access to a broad range of tools and resources to use in your own work:

• Digital subscription to The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society for one year.
• Digital subscription to the book imprint for one year.
• One article publication per year (pending peer review).
• Participation as a reviewer in the peer review process, with the opportunity to be listed as a Reviewer.
• Subscription to the network e-newsletter, providing access to news and announcements for and from the Research Network.
• Option to add a video presentation to the research network YouTube channel.
• Free access to the Scholar social knowledge platform, including:
  ○ Personal profile and publication portfolio page.
  ○ Ability to interact and form communities with peers away from the clutter and commercialism of other social media.
  ○ Optional feeds to Facebook and Twitter.
  ○ Complimentary use of Scholar in your classes—for class interactions in its research network space, multimodal student writing in its Creator space, and managing student peer review, assessment, and sharing of published work.
Engage through Social Media

www.facebook.com/ReligionInSociety  @religionsociety | #ReligionConference18

Present and Participate in the Conference
You have already begun your engagement in the research network by attending the conference, presenting your work, and interacting face-to-face with other members. We hope this experience provides a valuable source of feedback for your current work and the possible seeds for future individual and collaborative projects, as well as the start of a conversation with research network colleagues that will continue well into the future.

Publish Journal Articles or Books
We encourage you to submit an article for review and possible publication in the journal. In this way, you may share the finished outcome of your presentation with other participants and members of the research network. As a member of the network, you will also be invited to review others’ work and contribute to the development of the research network knowledge base as a Reviewer. As part of your active membership in the research network, you also have online access to the complete works (current and previous volumes) of the journal and to the book imprint. We also invite you to consider submitting a proposal for the book imprint.
The principal role of the Advisory Board is to drive the overall intellectual direction of the Religion in Society Research Network and to consult on our foundational themes as they evolve along with the currents of the field. Board members are invited to attend the annual conference and provide important insights on conference development, including suggestions for speakers, venues, and special themes. We also encourage board members to submit articles for publication consideration to The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society as well as proposals or completed manuscripts to the Religion in Society Book Imprint.

We are grateful for the continued service and support of the following world-class scholars and practitioners.

- Desmond Cahill, RMIT, Melbourne, Australia
- Catherine Caufield, Chester Ronning Centre for the Study of Religion and Public Life, University of Alberta, Edmonton, Canada
- Recep Dogan, Charles Sturt University, Bathurst, Australia
- Tracy Fessenden, Arizona State University, Phoenix, USA
- Corey Harris, Alvernia University, Reading, USA
- Mohammad Khalil, Michigan State University, East Lansing, USA
- Steve Knowles, University of Chester, Chester, UK

A Social Knowledge Platform

Create Your Academic Profile and Connect to Peers

Developed by our brilliant Common Ground software team, Scholar connects academic peers from around the world in a space that is modulated for serious discourse and the presentation of knowledge works.

Utilize Your Free Scholar Membership Today through

- Building your academic profile and list of published works.
- Joining a research network with a thematic or disciplinary focus.
- Establishing a new Research Network relevant to your field.
- Creating new academic work in our innovative publishing space.
- Building a peer review network around your work or courses.

Scholar Quick Start Guide

2. Enter a “blip” (a very brief one-sentence description of yourself).
3. Click on the “Find and join communities” link located under the YOUR COMMUNITIES heading (On the left hand navigation bar).
4. Search for a research network to join or create your own.

Scholar Next Steps – Build Your Academic Profile

- About: Include information about yourself, including a linked CV in the top, dark blue bar.
- Interests: Create searchable information so others with similar interests can locate you.
- Peers: Invite others to connect as a peer and keep up with their work.
- Shares: Make your page a comprehensive portfolio of your work by adding publications in the Shares area - be these full text copies of works in cases where you have permission, or a link to a bookstore, library or publisher listing. If you choose Common Ground’s hybrid open access option, you may post the final version of your work here, available to anyone on the web if you select the ‘make my site public’ option.
- Image: Add a photograph of yourself to this page; hover over the avatar and click the pencil/edit icon to select.
- Publisher: All Common Ground research network members have free access to our peer review space for their courses. Here they can arrange for students to write multimodal essays or reports in the Creator space (including image, video, audio, dataset or any other file), manage student peer review, co-ordinate assessments, and share students’ works by publishing them to the Research network space.

Scholar is a digital learning platform that transforms the patterns of interaction in learning by putting students first, positioning them as knowledge producers instead of passive knowledge consumers. Scholar provides scaffolding to encourage making and sharing knowledge drawing from multiple sources rather than memorizing knowledge that has been presented to them.

Scholar also answers one of the most fundamental questions students and instructors have of their performance, “How am I doing?” Typical modes of assessment often answer this question either too late to matter or in a way that is not clear or comprehensive enough to meaningfully contribute to better performance.

A collaborative research and development project between Common Ground and the College of Education at the University of Illinois, Scholar contains a Research Network space, a multimedia web writing space, a formative assessment environment that facilitates peer review, and a dashboard with aggregated machine and human formative and summative writing assessment data.

The following Scholar features are only available to Common Ground Research Network members as part of their membership. Please email us at support@cgscholar.com if you would like the complimentary educator account that comes with participation in a Common Ground conference.

- Create projects for groups of students, involving draft, peer review, revision and publication.
- Publish student works to each student’s personal portfolio space, accessible through the web for class discussion.
- Create and distribute surveys.
- Evaluate student work using a variety of measures in the assessment dashboard.

Scholar is a generation beyond learning management systems. It is what we term a Digital Learning Platform—it transforms learning by engaging students in powerfully horizontal “social knowledge” relationships. For more information, visit: http://knowledge.cgscholar.com.
Religion in Society
Journal

Aiming to be a definitive resource for the study of religion and spirituality and to create an interdisciplinary conversation on the role of religion in society and the changing dimensions of spirituality.
About

The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society aims to create an intellectual frame of reference for the academic study of religion and spirituality, and to create an interdisciplinary conversation on the role of religion and spirituality in society. It is intended as a place for critical engagement, examination, and experimentation of ideas that connect religious philosophies to their contexts throughout history in the world, places of worship, on the streets, and in communities. The journal addresses the need for critical discussion on religious issues—specifically as they are situated in the present-day contexts of ethics, warfare, politics, anthropology, sociology, education, leadership, artistic engagement, and the dissonance or resonance between religious tradition and modern trends.

The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society is peer-reviewed, supported by rigorous processes of criterion-referenced article ranking and qualitative commentary, ensuring that only intellectual work of the greatest substance and highest significance is published.

Editor

Luis G. Roger-Castillo, Center of Byzantine, Modern Greek and Cypriot Studies, University of Granada, Spain

Reviewers

Articles published in The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society are peer reviewed by scholars who are active members of the Religion in Society Research Network. Reviewers may be past or present conference delegates, fellow submitters to the journal, or scholars who have volunteered to review papers (and have been screened by Common Ground’s editorial team). This engagement with the Research Network, as well as Common Ground’s synergistic and criterion-based evaluation system, distinguishes the peer review process from journals that have a more top-down approach to refereeing. Reviewers are assigned to papers based on their academic interests and scholarly expertise. In recognition of the valuable feedback and publication recommendations that they provide, reviewers are acknowledged as Reviewers in the volume that includes the paper(s) they reviewed. Thus, in addition to The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society’s Editors and Advisory Board, the Reviewers contribute significantly to the overall editorial quality and content of the journal.

Article Submission Process and Timeline

Below, please find step-by-step instructions on the journal article submission process:

1. Review the Requirements: All article submissions must meet the Article Requirements listed on our Author Guidelines page (http://cgnetworks.org/support/author-guidelines). Before submitting your article, please thoroughly review these requirements, and revise your article to follow these rules. Initial submissions which do not meet these requirements will be returned to the author(s) for revision.

2. Upload the Submission: Once you have revised your initial submission to meet the article requirements, you may then upload your submission in one of two ways:
   - If you are not attending a CGRN conference and you simply wish to submit your article for consideration to one of the CGRN academic journals, please use the following guide: Submitting an Article to the Journal (http://cgnetworks.org/support/submitting-an-article-to-the-journal).
   - If you are presenting at a conference, your conference registration includes a complimentary Research Network Membership* (see Step 6). Please upload your article submission using your conference proposal (this will allow you to skip Step 6 of the process). For assistance in uploading, please use the Journal Article Submission for Scholar Event Attendees guide: (http://cgnetworks.org/support/journal-article-submission-using-the-conference-portal).

3. Checking Progress: Once your article is received, you can view the status of its progress by logging into your CGPublisher account at www.cgpublisher.com. In time, CGPublisher will be retired, and our publishing will be managed through our new all-in-one platform, CG Scholar. For now, only Common Ground conferences have been completely integrated into CG Scholar. Publishing is only partially integrated into CG Scholar. After the publication process is complete, published articles appear in the CG Scholar Bookstore under the corresponding journal title. We’ll keep you updated as progress continues, and if you ever have questions, you can always reach us at support.cgnetworks.org.

4. Initial Submission Accepted for Peer Review: Submitted articles are then verified against the Article Requirements (listed in the Author Guidelines). If your article satisfies these requirements, your identity and contact details are then removed, and the article is matched to two appropriate referees and sent for review. Please note, during this time authors are eligible to be selected to as a reviewer for other articles in this same stage. Full details regarding the rules, expectations, and policies on peer review can be found on our Peer Review Policies page.

5. Peer Review Decision: When both referee reports are uploaded, and after the referees’ identities have been removed, you will be notified by email through cgpublisher. Your message will provide with a link to view the reports, if you have trouble, see our guide (http://cgnetworks.org/support/how-to-download-your-referee-reports). Articles which are rejected once in the peer review process are allowed a second opportunity to be reviewed by two new reviewers. To be reviewed by two new reviewers, you will need make revisions based on the comments and feedback of the first round of review, and these changes must be detailed using a change note (http://cgnetworks.org/support/change-note-journal-article). If an article is not accepted by peer review after this second opportunity, it must be withdrawn from consideration.

6. Membership Confirmation: If your article has been accepted or accepted with revisions, it will enter the membership confirmation stage. We require at least one author associated with the article to have a unique Research Network Membership or Conference registration (http://cgnetworks.org/support/register-for-a-membership). Please note, a paid conference registration includes a complimentary Research Network Membership, this will allow you to skip this step.
7. Publication Agreement: Next you will be asked to accept the Publishing Agreement. If you are interested in Hybrid Open Access, this step is the best time to register for Open Access Publication (http://cgnetworks.org/journals/hybrid-open-access).

8. Prepare the Final Submission: After the publication agreement is final, you will have 30 days to complete any revisions to your final submission and upload your article. Please ensure your final submission meets the Final Submission Requirements before uploading your article (http://cgnetworks.org/support/final-submission-downloads-and-guides). This includes such criteria as the correct use of the Chicago Manual of Style (17th edition) and the other listed requirements (http://cgnetworks.org/support/chicago-manual-of-style-citations-quick-guide). Articles which have been accepted with revisions will require a change note to be included with the final submission. Articles which do not meet these requirements will be returned for revision until these requirements are satisfied.

9. Final Inspection / “Ready for Typesetting”: Once we have received the final submission of your article, our Publishing Department will give your article a final review. During this step, your workflow status will be listed as “Ready for Typesetting,” indicating that the final submission is ready for inspection.

10. Copyediting and Proof Inspection: If the final submission meets the Final Submission Requirements, the article will then begin typesetting. At this phase you might be required to assist in correcting minor problems relating to grammar, spelling, citations, or references. You will be contacted when the typeset proof is available for inspection.

11. Article Publication: Individual articles are published “Web First” to our CG Scholar Bookstore (https://cgscholar.com/bookstore). After web-first publication, complete journal issues follow annually, biannually, or quarterly depending on the journal. Web-first published articles include a full citation and a registered DOI permalink. Be sure to keep your CG Scholar profile up-to-date (https://cgscholar.com/identity/) and add your ORCID iD (https://orcid.org/register) to maximize your article visibility.

Submission Timeline

You may submit your article for publication to the journal at any time throughout the year. The rolling submission deadlines are as follows:

- Submission Round 1 – 15 January
- Submission Round 2 – 15 April
- Submission Round 3 – 15 July
- Submission Round 4 (final) – 15 October

Note: If your article is submitted after the final deadline for the volume, it will be considered for the following year’s volume. The sooner you submit, the sooner your article will begin the peer review process. Also, because we publish “Web First,” early submission means that your article may be published with a full citation as soon as it is ready, even if that is before the full issue is published.
Hybrid Open Access

All Common Ground Journals are Hybrid Open Access. Hybrid Open Access is an option increasingly offered by both university presses and well-known commercial publishers.

Hybrid Open Access means some articles are available only to subscribers, while others are made available at no charge to anyone searching the web. Authors pay an additional fee for the open access option. Authors may do this because open access is a requirement of their research-funding agency, or they may do this so non-subscribers can access their article for free.

Common Ground’s open access charge is $250 per article—a very reasonable price compared to our hybrid open access competitors and purely open access journals resourced with an author publication fee. Digital articles are normally only available through individual or institutional subscriptions or for purchase at $5 per article. However, if you choose to make your article Open Access, this means anyone on the web may download it for free.

Paying subscribers still receive considerable benefits with access to all articles in the journal, from both current and past volumes, without any restrictions. However, making your paper available at no charge through Open Access increases its visibility, accessibility, potential readership, and citation counts. Open Access articles also generate higher citation counts.

Institutional Open Access

Common Ground is proud to announce an exciting new model of scholarly publishing called Institutional Open Access.

Institutional Open Access allows faculty and graduate students to submit articles to Common Ground journals for unrestricted open access publication. These articles will be freely and publicly available to the whole world through our hybrid open access infrastructure. With Institutional Open Access, instead of the author paying a per-article open access fee, institutions pay a set annual fee that entitles their students and faculty to publish a given number of open access articles each year.

The rights to the articles remain with the subscribing institution. Both the author and the institution can also share the final typeset version of the article in any place they wish, including institutional repositories, personal websites, and privately or publicly accessible course materials. We support the highest Sherpa/Romeo access level—Green.

For more information on how to make your article Open Access, or information on Institutional Open Access, please contact us at support@cgnetworks.org.
International Award for Excellence

The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society presents an annual International Award for Excellence for new research or thinking in the area of religion. All articles submitted for publication in The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society are entered into consideration for this award. The review committee for the award is selected from the International Advisory Board for Religion in Society Research Network and the annual International Conference on Religion and Spirituality in Society. The committee selects the winning article from the ten highest-ranked articles emerging from the review process and according to the selection criteria outlined in the reviewer guidelines.

Abstract

This article explores how scholarship on Buddhist self-immolation has changed between 1963 and 2013. Attention is given to how academic orientations and methods have evolved from early tensions between traditional exegesis of texts and sociopolitical analysis of context to recent literature utilizing interdisciplinary approaches that attempt to reconcile such tensions. This methodological shift can be interpreted via Delores Williams’s three-fold womanist hermeneutic. Early literature on Buddhist self-immolation generally falls within either the first or third movements of Williams’s methodology: building continuity with tradition or relating faith to politics. Utilized independently, these two movements are unable to provide a holistic understanding of self-immolation. Williams’s second movement of “protogetical” analysis remedies this problem by placing the act of self-immolation in relationship with a greater number of “cultural deposits,” non-traditional texts and mediums that speak to this practice across different times and places. “Protogesis” thereby bridges traditional textual exegesis and social analysis. This interdisciplinary turn to protogetical analysis is evidenced in recent studies on Buddhist self-immolation that expand the range of materials studied. This article argues this shift in method and perspective ought to challenge researchers of religious phenomenon to shift their attention toward more holistic cultural readings that acknowledge a plurality of meanings and motivations.
Research Network Membership and Personal Subscriptions

As part of each conference registration, all conference participants (both virtual and in-person) have a one-year digital subscription to The International Journal of Religion and Spirituality in Society. This complimentary personal subscription grants access to the current volume as well as the entire backlist. The period of complimentary access begins at the time of registration and ends one year after the close of the conference. After that time, delegates may purchase a personal subscription.

To view articles, go to https://cgscholar.com/bookstore and select the “Sign in” option. An account in CG Scholar has already been made on your behalf; the username/email and password are identical to your CG Publisher account. After logging into your account, you should have free access to download electronic articles in the bookstore. Aiming to set new standards in participatory knowledge creation and scholarly publication
Call for Books
Common Ground is setting new standards of rigorous academic knowledge creation and scholarly publication. Unlike other publishers, we’re not interested in the size of potential markets or competition from other books. We’re only interested in the intellectual quality of the work. If your book is a brilliant contribution to a specialist area of knowledge that only serves a small intellectual research network, we still want to publish it. If it is expansive and has a broad appeal, we want to publish it too, but only if it is of the highest intellectual quality.

We welcome proposals or completed manuscript submissions of:
- Individually and jointly authored books
- Edited collections addressing a clear, intellectually challenging theme
- Collections of articles published in our journals
- Out-of-copyright books, including important books that have gone out of print and classics with new introductions

Book Proposal Guidelines
Books should be between 30,000 and 150,000 words in length. They are published simultaneously in print and electronic formats and are available through Amazon and as Kindle editions. To publish a book, please send us a proposal including:
- Title
- Author(s)/editor(s)
- Draft back-cover blurb
- Author bio note(s)
- Table of contents
- Intended audience and significance of contribution
- Sample chapters or complete manuscript
- Manuscript submission date

Proposals can be submitted by email to books@cgnetworks.org. Please note the book imprint to which you are submitting in the subject line.
Call for Book Reviewers

Common Ground Research Networks is seeking distinguished peer reviewers to evaluate book manuscripts.

As part of our commitment to intellectual excellence and a rigorous review process, Common Ground sends book manuscripts that have received initial editorial approval to peer reviewers to further evaluate and provide constructive feedback. The comments and guidance that these reviewers supply is invaluable to our authors and an essential part of the publication process.

Common Ground recognizes the important role of reviewers by acknowledging book reviewers as members of the Editorial Review Board for a period of at least one year. The list of members of the Editorial Review Board will be posted on our website.

If you would like to review book manuscripts, please send an email to books@cgnetworks.org with:

- A brief description of your professional credentials
- A list of your areas of interest and expertise
- A copy of your CV with current contact details

If we feel that you are qualified and we require refereeing for manuscripts within your purview, we will contact you.
The Gay Apostle and Other Essays

David Dawkins

The Gay Apostle and Other Essays is a sociological study of Saint Paul and the controversies emanating from his teaching about homosexuality, the role of women, marriage, and divorce. The title essay contends that St. Paul was homosexual and that his conversion to Christianity resulted from a psychotic seizure due to mental stress brought on by homosexual urges that ran counter to his deeply-engrained religious faith. Paul eventually formed an affective but celibate relationship with St. Luke and sublimated his sexual desires by pouring energy into a passion for God as the missionary to the Gentiles, which conveniently took him into the safer, more tolerant, non-Judaic Roman world. Yet despite all this, his bequeathed to Christianity a homophobic outlook. Some say Paul has been misunderstood, but David Dawkins argues that his condemnatory words mean exactly what they say, though they do require explanation, and in our better-informed age Paul’s opinions should be rejected. This questions the notion of the Bible as “The Word of God.” Following Paul, the Church adopted a view of marriage as divinely ordained and strictly monogamist, but research in evolutionary biology and behavioural science indicates that family and marriage are variable social constructs. By medieval times, the Church had institutionalized marriage and divorce as a means of exerting socio-political influence, but one king wrested power from the Vatican by reclaiming a right established in the Magna Carta. His story, encompassing geopolitics and papal corruption and venality, also reveals how willing the Church has been to disregard its own rules.

Author Bio:

David Dawkins has a diploma in theology and a doctorate in sociology. Born in a Welsh coal-mining valley, he has lived in Australia since the age of twelve. He worked in banking until he was conscripted for military service in the Australian Army. Following this, he studied theology, was ordained, worked in suburban parishes, and was appointed adjunct Anglican Chaplain at Monash University. Radical theological views led him to move out of ecclesiastic life, first to teach English to indigenous high school students in Papua New Guinea and then to an academic career in sociology at Deakin University, where he was head of the Workplace Education Program.
Spiritual Formation: A History of Mysticism

Donald Gates and Peter Steane

_Spiritual Formation: A History of Mysticism_ portrays a spiritual pilgrimage. It is a journey we take in our faith lives. Mystical experiences from the Old and New Testaments are described as are the revelations of early church leaders, from Augustine, Thomas Aquinas, to later European mystics and Saints such as John of the Cross and Teresa of Avila.

The eighteenth-century Enlightenment saw mystics, such as John and Charles Wesley, emphasize a “social holiness” evidenced in social action, such as Wilberforce’s Anti Slavery Crusade. This emphasis on practical holiness continued with William and Catherine Booth’s founding of The Salvation Army, which is typically Wesleyan in its understanding of holiness-in-action, and aligned with Pierre Teilhard de Chardin’s Natural Evolutionary Theology.

The authors argue that spiritual leaders, poets, and musicians satisfy Matthew Fox’s definition of a mystic as holding a “vital belief in a transcendent reality ... as they can communicate with that reality by direct experience”. This book provides a framework for ministry, social justice action, and policy with practical disciplines for the spiritual journey.

Author Bios:

Dr. Donald Gates is a retired Salvation Army officer with fifty-four years of service. He has had appointments in education, management, ministry, and social service, including nine years in Papua New Guinea. Dr. Gates possesses degrees in economics, social science, education, and a doctoral degree in values in policy formation. He continues to research values in social and economic policy and spiritual ministry.

Dr. Peter Steane is a Catholic priest with three decades experience in education, formation, and leadership development. He is currently a professor of management at Australian Catholic University and continues to research and teach ethical leadership, strategic thinking, and organizational renewal.
Religion in Society Conference

Curating global interdisciplinary spaces, supporting professionally rewarding relationships
Religion in Society

About the Conference

Conference History
Founded in 2011, the International Conference on Religion and Spirituality in Society brings together scholars, teachers, and practitioners together to reflect on the relationships of religion and spirituality to society. The conference aims to provide a space for careful, scholarly reflection, and open dialogue.

The International Conference on Religion and Spirituality in Society is built upon four key features: Internationalism, Interdisciplinarity, Inclusiveness, and Interaction. Conference delegates include leaders in the field as well as emerging scholars, who travel to the conference from all corners of the globe and represent a broad range of disciplines and perspectives. A variety of presentation options and session types offer delegates multiple opportunities to engage, to discuss key issues in the field, and to build relationships with scholars from other cultures and disciplines.

Past Conferences
- 2011 - University Center, Chicago, USA
- 2012 - UBC, Robson Square, Vancouver, Canada
- 2013 - Arizona State University, Tempe, USA
- 2014 - Universidad Nacional Costa Rica, Heredia, Costa Rica
- 2015 - University of California at Berkeley, Berkeley, USA
- 2016 - The Catholic University of America, Washington D.C., USA
- 2017 - Imperial College London, London, UK

Plenary Speaker Highlights:
The International Conference on Religion and Spirituality in Society has a rich history of featuring leading and emerging voices from the field, including:

- Desmond Cahill, RMIT University, Melbourne, Australia (2012)
- Wendy Doniger, University of Chicago Divinity School, Chicago, USA (2011)
- Tracy Fessenden, Arizona State University, Tempe, USA (2013)
- Steve Knowles, University of Chester, Chester, UK (2014)
- Robert McKim, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, Champaign-Urbana, USA (2011)
- Francisco Mena, National University of Costa Rica, Heredia, Costa Rica (2014)
- David J. O’Brien, University of Missouri, Columbia, USA (2017)
- Steven Pfaff, University of Washington, Seattle, USA (2015)
- Norbert M. Samuelson, Arizona State University, Tempe, USA (2013)
- Rhys H. Williams, Loyola University, Chicago, USA (2015)

Conference Principles and Features

The structure of the conference is based on four core principles that pervade all aspects of the research network:

International
This conference travels around the world to provide opportunities for delegates to see and experience different countries and locations. But more importantly, the Religion in Society conference offers a tangible and meaningful opportunity to engage with scholars from a diversity of cultures and perspectives. This year, delegates from over 25 countries are in attendance, offering a unique and unparalleled opportunity to engage directly with colleagues from all corners of the globe.

Interdisciplinary
Unlike association conferences attended by delegates with similar backgrounds and specialties, this conference brings together researchers, practitioners, and scholars from a wide range of disciplines who have a shared interest in the themes and concerns of this research network. As a result, topics are broached from a variety of perspectives, interdisciplinary methods are applauded, and mutual respect and collaboration are encouraged.

Inclusive
Anyone whose scholarly work is sound and relevant is welcome to participate in this research network and conference, regardless of discipline, culture, institution, or career path. Whether an emeritus professor, graduate student, researcher, teacher, policymaker, practitioner, or administrator, your work and your voice can contribute to the collective body of knowledge that is created and shared by this research network.

Interactive
To take full advantage of the rich diversity of cultures, backgrounds, and perspectives represented at the conference, there must be ample opportunities to speak, listen, engage, and interact. A variety of session formats, from more to less structured, are offered throughout the conference to provide these opportunities.
Religion in Society | Ways of Speaking

Plenary
Plenary speakers, chosen from among the world’s leading thinkers, offer formal presentations on topics of broad interest to the research network and conference delegation. One or more speakers are scheduled into a plenary session, most often the first session of the day. As a general rule, there are no questions or discussion during these sessions. Instead, plenary speakers answer questions and participate in informal, extended discussions during their Garden Conversation.

Garden Conversation
Garden Conversations are informal, unstructured sessions that allow delegates a chance to meet plenary speakers and talk with them at length about the issues arising from their presentation. When the venue and weather allow, we try to arrange for a circle of chairs to be placed outdoors.

Talking Circles
Held on the first day of the conference, Talking Circles offer an early opportunity to meet other delegates with similar interests and concerns. Delegates self-select into groups based on broad thematic areas and then engage in extended discussion about the issues and concerns they feel are of utmost importance to that segment of the research network. Questions like “Who are we?”, “What is our common ground?”, “What are the current challenges facing society in this area?”, “What challenges do we face in constructing knowledge and effecting meaningful change in this area?” may guide the conversation. When possible, a second Talking Circle is held on the final day of the conference, for the original group to reconvene and discuss changes in their perspectives and understandings as a result of the conference experience. Reports from the Talking Circles provide a framework for the delegates’ final discussions during the Closing Session.

Themed Paper Presentations
Paper presentations are grouped by general themes or topics into sessions comprised of three or four presentations followed by group discussion. Each presenter in the session makes a formal twenty-minute presentation of their work; Q&A and group discussion follow after all have presented. Session Chairs introduce the speakers, keep time on the presentations, and facilitate the discussion. Each presenter’s formal, written paper will be available to participants if accepted to the journal.

Colloquium
Colloquium sessions are organized by a group of colleagues who wish to present various dimensions of a project or perspectives on an issue. Four or five short formal presentations are followed by a moderator. A single article or multiple articles may be submitted to the journal based on the content of a colloquium session.
Focused Discussion
For work that is best discussed or debated, rather than reported on through a formal presentation, these sessions provide a forum for an extended “roundtable” conversation between an author and a small group of interested colleagues. Several such discussions occur simultaneously in a specified area, with each author’s table designated by a number corresponding to the title and topic listed in the program schedule. Summaries of the author’s key ideas, or points of discussion, are used to stimulate and guide the discourse. A single article, based on the scholarly work and informed by the focused discussion as appropriate, may be submitted to the journal.

Workshop/Interactive Session
Workshop sessions involve extensive interaction between presenters and participants around an idea or hands-on experience of a practice. These sessions may also take the form of a crafted panel, staged conversation, dialogue or debate—all involving substantial interaction with the audience. A single article (jointly authored, if appropriate) may be submitted to the journal based on a workshop session.

Poster Sessions
Poster sessions present preliminary results of works in progress or projects that lend themselves to visual displays and representations. These sessions allow for engagement in informal discussions about the work with interested delegates throughout the session.

Virtual Lightning Talk
Lightning talks are 5-minute “flash” video presentations. Authors present summaries or overviews of their work, describing the essential features (related to purpose, procedures, outcomes, or product). Like Paper Presentations, Lightning Talks are grouped according to topic or perspective into themed sessions. Authors are welcome to submit traditional “lecture style” videos or videos that use visual supports like PowerPoint. Final videos must be submitted at least one month prior to the conference start date. After the conference, videos are then presented on the network YouTube channel. Full papers can based in the virtual poster can also be submitted for consideration in the journal.

Virtual Poster
This format is ideal for presenting preliminary results of work in progress or for projects that lend themselves to visual displays and representations. Each poster should include a brief abstract of the purpose and procedures of the work. After acceptance, presenters are provided with a template and Virtual Posters are submitted as a PDF. Final posters must be submitted at least one month prior to the conference start date. Full papers based on the virtual poster can also be submitted for consideration in the journal.

Tuesday, 17 April | 19:00 (7:00 PM) | Location: Le Bateau Ivre (2629 Telegraph Ave, Berkeley)

Join other conference delegates and plenary speakers for a dinner at Le Bateau Ivre!

Set in a converted home built in 1898, this quaint eatery is a romantic French treasure, serving a fresh seasonal menu.

Closing Reception
Wednesday, 18 April | 17:10 (5:10 PM) | Location: Clark Kerr Campus

On Wednesday, 18 April, immediately following the end of sessions, the Religion in Society Conference and Common Ground Research Networks will host a closing reception at the conference venue. Join delegates and plenaries for drinks, light hors d’oeuvres, and a chance to converse!
Plenary Speakers

Susan Abraham

Is Religion Relevant? The Time, Space, and Law of the Nation

Dr. Susan Abraham’s teaching and research explores postcolonial and feminist theological practices. She is the author of Identity, Ethics, and Nonviolence in Postcolonial Theory: A Rahnerian Theological Assessment (Palgrave Macmillan, 2007) and co-editor of Shoulder to Shoulder: Frontiers in Catholic Feminist Theology (Fortress, 2009). She brings extensive experience and knowledge of higher education and institutional practices through her past affiliations with St. Bonaventure University and Harvard Divinity School, where she taught and served as Associate Director for the Center for the Study of World Religions. Her publications and presentations weave practical theological insights from her experience of working as a youth minister in Mumbai, India, with theoretical perspectives from postcolonial theory, cultural studies, and feminist theory.

Ongoing research projects include issues in feminist theological education and formation, theology and race, interfaith and interreligious peace initiatives, theology, political and economic theory, religion and media, and Christianity between colonialism and postcolonialism. She holds a BA and an MA in English from the University of Mumbai, an MA in theology from the Catholic Theological Union, and a doctorate in theology from Harvard Divinity School.

Catherine Caufield

Spirituality, Religion, and Sociopolitical Engagement

Dr. Caufield holds a doctorate in religious studies from the Centre for the Study of Religion at the University of Toronto and has received a number of awards, including a post-doctoral fellowship (University of Toronto) and a Foreign Government Award (Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México). She has worked in academic institutions for more than fifteen years, most recently as Associate Director of the Chester Ronning Centre for the Study of Religion and Public Life, where she edited an insightful collection of essays entitled Reflections on Religion and Public Life, published in 2017. Her research interests are focused on religiospirituality in contemporary local and global sociopolitical contexts, with particular attention to how hearing and understanding is developed within religious traditions as well as between and within overlapping religious and secular contexts. The author of two monographs and numerous articles and book chapters, she is currently working on a multi-co-authored book with the working title A Shared Future, A Shared Country: Aboriginal and non-Aboriginal Canadians Living Together with Mutual Respect.
Jason Ashe

Jason Ashe is a doctoral student in the Graduate Department of Human Services Psychology at the University of Maryland, Baltimore County (UMBC). As a Behavioral Medicine and Community Psychologist, Jason is exploring the multidimensionality of black Christian religiosity and spirituality in concert with racial/ethnic health disparities. Specifically, he interrogates how faith-based narratives, social support, and religiosity among African Americans influence health behaviors, physician-patient relationships, and inflammation. Jason studied chemistry at MIT and immediately after graduation began his theological training at Duke University Divinity School, obtaining his master of divinity and master of theology degrees. He is passionate about social justice, championing for better healthcare accessibility, affordability, and equity.

Paul Houston Blankenship

Paul Houston Blankenship is a PhD candidate at the Graduate Theological Union in Berkeley. His dissertation is an ethnography on the spiritual lives of people experiencing homelessness in Seattle. Since 2016, Paul has served as an adjunct professor at Seattle University and as a visiting scholar at the University of Washington. Prior to entering the academy, Paul was a social worker in San Diego and Santa Ana.

Christine Dennis

Christine is completing her M.A. in comparative theology this spring at LMU. Christine’s research focuses on the creative processes of feminist inquiry and self-love. She plans to pursue her Ph.D. in transformative consciousness studies at the California Institute of Integral Studies. Rooted in a family lineage of curanderas from Mexico City, spiritual healing provides an important dimension to her theological pursuits.

Daniel N. Gullotta

Daniel N. Gullotta is a historian of religion and is particularly interested in the history of North American Christianity and biblical interpretation. He is currently a PhD student in religious studies at Stanford University and is a recent graduate of Yale University’s Divinity School, where he earned of master of arts degree in religion with a concentration in the history of Christianity. His scholarship is focused on eighteenth- and nineteenth-century American Christianity, and some of his interests include Joseph Smith and early Mormonism, American witchcraft and occult traditions, and the relationship between Jacksonian democracy and religion. He is also the host of the podcast Age of Jackson.

Rafał Milerski

Rafał is a PhD candidate at Ludwig-Maximilians-Universität München in Germany, where he is working on a dissertation on religious freedom and US-Vatican relations. He has studied in Washington, DC; Warsaw; and Heidelberg. Rafał’s research interests are in the intersection of religion and politics and in political and legal history and theory.
Nausheen Pasha-Zaidi

Nausheen Pasha-Zaidi, PhD, has degrees in communications, education, and psychology. She has worked as an international educator for almost twenty years, focusing on language development and cultural studies with an emphasis on Muslim populations. Her articles have appeared in a number of professional journals including the Middle East Journal of Positive Psychology, Ethnicities, and The Journal of International Women’s Studies. She is the author of The Colour of Mehndi, a novel that explores acculturation, family values, and mental illness within the Pakistani-American community and is the lead editor of Mirror on the Veil: a Collection of Personal Narratives on Hijab and Veiling.

Rita Phillips

Rita Phillips is a PhD student studying psychology at Oxford Brookes University, supervised by Professor Vince Connelly and Dr. Mark Burgess. Rita’s general research interests revolve around the development and construction of perceptions to facilitate an understanding of observable attitudes and behaviours. She conducts social psychological research; is an Oxford University Mellon-Sawyer Fellow; and lectures about psychology at Oxford Brookes University, the University of East London, and St. Clare’s College Oxford. Next to other projects, she is working on a joint publication, “Beyond the Uniform(ity): Social Construction of Images of Veterans in the Post Truth World,” which will be launched in 2019.

Austin Tiffany

Austin is a PhD student at the University of Cambridge and is affiliated with the Department of Sociology and the Woolf Institute. His PhD research examines how social change has reshaped the role of clergy and the interreligious training provided by seminary institutions. His data draws from Jewish and Christian seminary faculty and clergy in New York and London. By better understanding the interreligious actions of clergy and teaching at seminaries, Austin hopes his research will spur faith communities to think about their relationship with other religions and society in a more robust manner.

Ruth Tsuria

Ruth Tsuria, Assistant Professor at Seton Hall University College of Communication and the Arts, earned her PhD from the Department of Communication at Texas A&M University. Her research, which investigates the intersection of digital media, religion, and feminism, has been published in various academic outlets, including The Communication Review, Journal of Media and Religion, and New Media + Society. Her work has been supported by various bodies, including the Women and Gender Studies Program at Texas A&M University. She is currently working on her first book, Holy Women, Pious Sex and Sanctified Internet: Exploring Jewish Online Discourse on Gender and Sexuality.

Lucinda Yang

Lucinda Yang is currently a PhD student at Baylor University’s Department of Religion in Waco, Texas. Before this, she most recently completed her master’s degree at Duke Divinity School, where she focused on theology and spirituality in patristics. As a unique Puerto-Rican-born Chinese-American, Lucinda has always seen a need for religious global engagement and intercultural dialogue. Because of this, her doctoral research is primarily devoted to the study of the Pentecostal Movement of the twentieth century, with an emphasis upon women’s liberation, missionary work, and theology of the Holy Spirit.

Gender in Transformation: The Temporary Buddhist Ordination and Women’s Empowerment in Thailand
Kakanang Yavaprabhas, University College London, London, United Kingdom

Literature about the issue of bhikkhuni (female Buddhist monks or fully ordained nuns), whose existence in Theravada tradition has controversially been recently revived, tends to portray the topic as more relevant to international platforms than to local communities. This study, based on ethnographic fieldwork in Thailand, however, shows that the topic of bhikkhuni is pertinent to locals and the society. In Thai society where nearly 95 percent of the population self-identifies as Buddhist, Buddhism is influential and the full Buddhist monastic status is highly prestigious. The full monastic form for women as bhikkhuni bestowed by the Buddha, however, was not locally available, and only in 2003 that the first Thai woman can controversially assume it. In 2009 the temporary ordination as female novices (samānārī), remarkably similar to the traditional temporary ordination for men, has also been publicly available and at least 1,234 Thai women received the ordination. This study argues that the temporary samānārī ordination, which is socially significant, is empowering for women and is positively changing gender ideology and gender notions in society. Arguably the most socially impactful aspect of the bhikkhuni movements, the temporary ordination also demonstrates how changes in the religious domain can have powerful social implications.

The Politics of Religion

Women, Sufism and Societal Change: A Study of an NGO, The Turkish Women Cultural Association
Denz Mater, Uskudar University, Istanbul, Turkey

Sufism has an unusual history in Turkey. Embraced and promoted during the Ottoman rule for six hundred years, Sufism was suddenly banned during the Republic period in 1925. Dervish lodges were closed and Sufism retreated into hiding. In the latter decades, the secular fears of political Islam created space for Sufism to resurface through the efforts of non-governmental organizations (NGOs). My research sheds light on an NGO called the Turkish Women Cultural Association (TURKKAD). Founded in 1966 by Samitha Ayverdi, a Sufi teacher, TURKKAD approached Sufism through the lens of women as the “mystic power holding the keys to a more harmonious society.” Taking the message of her teacher to heart, Cemalnur Sargut, the current Sheikha, furthers the approach of women as the agents of spiritual change. Under her leadership, TURKKAD has established institutes of Sufism and endowed academic chairs at the University of North Carolina, Beijing University, Kyoto University, and Uskudar University in Istanbul. From its humble beginnings, today TURKKAD is one of the most prominent champions advancing the scholarship of Sufism nationally and globally. TURKKAD showcases Muslim women’s agency for transforming the space of religion and spirituality in contemporary Turkey. This paper investigates TURKKAD’s contributions to spiritualism through women empowerment.

American Families of Faith Project: Discoveries at the Nexus of Religion and Relationships
David Dollahite, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, United States

Families are from 17 states and more than half the sample are from various ethnic/racial minorities. The purpose of the American Families of Faith Project is to explore the nexus of religion and family relationships in order to discover how faith works and why religion matters in families and to share ways of being religious that facilitate human joy as well as relational quality and stability. More than 50 scholarly articles reporting findings from the project have been published thus far. This paper reports major findings from the project including: how religion helps couples address conflict and reconcile after relational challenges; processes in parent-child religious conversations; youth religious identity and spiritual development; the kinds of sacrifices made by religious youth and why they are willing to make them; family religious processes; how dualities at the nexus of faith and family life produce divergent relational outcomes; relational struggles in religious families; identity-centered religious calling, being, and action among parents; transformative processes in religious families; firmness and flexibility in religious families; and struggles experienced by U.S. religious-ethnic minority families.

<td>Influence of the Family of Origin on the Religiosity and Spirituality of Gays, Lesbians and Bisexuals&lt;br&gt;Flora Mesquita, University of Fortaleza, Fortaleza, Brazil&lt;br&gt;Normanda Araujo De Morais, The number of surveys, especially in Brazil, that investigate the religious/spiritual experience of gays, lesbians and bisexuals (GLB) is still incipient. This shortage makes sense, considering that our Society dwells on heterosexist and homophobic principles. This qualitative study examined the influence of the family of origin on religiosity/spirituality among gay, lesbian and bisexual individuals, by exploring 10 GLB’s religious and spiritual experiences. Among the main findings the study showed that GLBs who were raised in Christian homes report a larger amount of moral conflicts between religiosity and sexual orientation throughout life, when compared to LGB raised in a non-Christian faith. The results of this survey suggests that, when combined, the acceptance of sexual orientation by family and the convergence between the system of faith and sexual orientation, can promote the frame of a positive feeling of LGB identity, functioning as a true positive coping factor, although the social context is disruptive. The Politics of Religion&lt;br&gt;&lt;br&gt;Les Couples Interreligieux: Attitudes towards Interfaith Relationships among Parisian Christians and Muslims&lt;br&gt;Victoria Arthur, Roanoke College, Salem, Virginia, United States&lt;br&gt;Qualitative interviews were conducted in Paris, France, to examine attitudes held by Parisian young adults of Muslim or Christian faith. 12 young adults between the ages of 18 and 26 were interviewed in 2017. Results were then translated and analyzed in English. Interview questions focused on religiosity, family, peer, and personal attitudes towards interfaith relationships, and respondents’ prior cross-cultural experiences and relationships. Respondents were also asked about the terrorist attacks of November 2015 in Paris, to see whether this event had any effect on attitudes towards Muslim/Christian relationships. The findings suggest that young adults of both Muslim and Christian faith backgrounds are generally more accepting of interfaith relationships if they had cross-cultural experiences in childhood and if their level of religiosity is low. Some respondents expressed support for interfaith relationships for friends and peers, but indicated a preference for same-faith relationships for themselves. No direct relationship was found between the terrorist attacks of November 2015 and openness towards interfaith relationships; however, some Christian respondents’ families expressed Islamophobic sentiments after the attacks. Religious Commonalities and Differences&lt;br&gt;&lt;br&gt;Suffering for Faith&lt;br&gt;Adam Beyt, Fordham University, New York, New York, United States&lt;br&gt;Suffering operates both as the condition and motivator for subject formation in relation to praxis. In positing Christian discipleship as being “subjects” to a sovereign God, Metz proposes a subject constituted by solidaristic praxis. This subject is never fully complete in embodying solidarity with past and future suffering, Butler is motivated by a secular impulse to discern the political, philosophical, and psychoanalytic tools useful to render livable the lives of individuals inhabiting marginalized identities. The subject is constituted in relation to the rest of society while also being circumscribed by the formation of an ego. She thus brings Freud into conversation with Foucault as a means of discerning the contours of power through different levels of literal subjection. Here, subject formation occurs within this network of power. Like Metz, subjects exist within social and discursive networks of power while also using narrative to “give an account of the self,” achieving a kind of political recognition through vulnerability. Both Metz and Butler are drawn to the suffering of marginalized groups and aspire to recognition through a performed political praxis. Amid the convergence of their thought, Metz’s apocalyptic subject can be affectively integrated into the sophisticated networks of power in relation to Foucauldian thought on discourse and psychoanalysis described by Butler. Butler’s analysis subject formation and her account of expanding terms of recognition may be integrated into Metz’s apocalyptic subject to create a psychoanalytically infused political theology. Viewed from the perspective of systematic theology, suffering is how the human person is constituted, is the challenge that propels the engine of discipleship, and is shown to be both the conditions and signs of God’s grace operating in the world. The Politics of Religion&lt;br&gt;&lt;br&gt;Experiences of Kapampangan Flagellants-Kristos&lt;br&gt;Nestor Sibug, Holy Angel University, Angeles, Philippines&lt;br&gt;Philip Joseph Sarmiento, Holy Angel University, Angeles, Philippines&lt;br&gt;Cristina Samia, Holy Angel University, Angeles, Philippines&lt;br&gt;Paolo Lumanlan, Holy Angel University, Angeles, Philippines&lt;br&gt;Benita Bonus, Holy Angel University, Angeles, Philippines&lt;br&gt;This study sought to explore the lived experiences of Kapampangan flagellant-Kristos using interpretative phenomenological analysis. Five (5) Kristos were personally interviewed using semi-structured questions about their life experiences. Findings revealed that there are three (3) superordinate themes namely: prosaic family life, spiritual drift and looking back-moving forward reflection. Such findings have implications to the Church, community and government. Religious Foundations</td>

| Status of Women in Sunnah of The Prophet Muhammad
Mustafa Erdil, Amity College, Sydney, Australia
Prophet Muhammad’s Sunnah should be interpreted according to the social problems in this modern age. Analysing of the Sunnah and making inferences therefrom according to the social issues of the time would be a significant academic work. In fact, these interpretations are a requirement of the modern age. With the help of these new elucidations, some social events, uncertain issues and the needs of the modern era would be solved. However, the fundamental principles of the Sunnah also should be considered while analysing of the Sunnah. In this manner, satisfactory and accurate interpretations in the social issues will demonstrate the Sunnah’s trustworthiness in the modern age. In the modern age, the status of women in Sunnah is an issue that is most frequently asked and criticised. Women’s rights,- that are critical issues and require new interpretations- can be examined again under the lens of the Sunnah. What is the status of women in different cultures in this modern age? What kind of status does the Sunnah give to women? These are the major questions that need to be addressed, and some contemporary Muslim scholars’ comments will constitute the main theme of this paper.

Hindu Women in Christian Prayer Groups: Transcending Religious Binaries in a Christian Neighbourhood in Kolkata
Abhijit Dasgupta, Indian Institute of Technology Bombay, Mumbai, India
The paper is an ethnographic attempt to explore the everyday lives of a Christian prayer group. It corroborates with Durkheim’s words in delineating the ways in which sacred is contagious and often dissects religious boundaries as shown in the context of the Christian ‘para’ (neighbourhood) in Kolkata. The report engages with the question of “what difference does Christianity make” and help us to see the "difference" through the ways in which messages of the Bible and teachings of Christ percolate deep into the lives of Hindu women who belong to the majority of such prayer groups. The participation of Hindu women in such Christian prayer meetings reveals the systematic connections between the two religions, women and their everyday struggle in urban cities. This specific form of sociality in the "para" leads one to argue: how is the nature of sociality in a Christian "para" functional in bringing change in neighbourhood relations? Can the fluidity of such Bible messages provide a basis of solidarity for ‘para’ women to understand each other’s narratives of loss and sadness?

| Diet as a Postmodern Orientation of Religion
Solen Thircuir, School for Advanced Studies in the Social Sciences, Paris, France
As Alan Levinovitz argued, food can be an entry point into the study of religion. How then does religiosity manifest itself in the raw food diet? This food practice is based on the idea of finding salvation, but for this to happen, one must find its nature. The raw food leaders promise a revolutionary diet that could cure disease and the return to Adam and Eve’s natural paradise. By condemning a cultural symbol that is cooking, they claim to have the key to escape the degenerative modernity. They seduce and convert a cult of followers in Western countries. The dichotomies on which the norms of this diet are based refer to the notions of pure and impure, of good and bad. They divide up the world according to moralistic binaries. This article aims to analyze the raw food diet values and how a myth is constructed by updating of religious foundations, where love for nature and believing in the power of certain foods can be considered as a religion.

Religious Commonalities and Differences

Rita Helena Phillips, Oxford Brookes University, Oxford, United Kingdom
Vincent Connelly, Oxford Brookes University, Oxford, United Kingdom
Mark Burgess, Oxford Brookes University, Oxford, United Kingdom

The Charismatic Renewal Movement, characterised by the use of spiritual gifts (i.e. praying in tongues, prophesying, healing), is a growing international trend in the Catholic, Protestant and Anglican church. However, it is not yet clear why there is this upsurge in the Charismatic Movement. In this paper, we draw on "Charismatic Christians' narrative accounts to exemplify how personal conceptualisations of "God" change through religious conversions and, in doing so, highlight a positive impact of these conceptual changes on identity formations. This paper reports on a set of autobiographic-narrative interviews with eight converted "Charismatic Christians" from the United Kingdom, Germany, Austria, New Zealand and Indonesia. Interviews were coded using Interpretative Phenomenological Analysis (IPA). This allowed a reconstruction of the process of religious transition. Individuals appear to produce social knowledge about God in de-traditionalised spheres in negotiation with knowledge imposed from traditional authority-driven societies. Therefore, this paper exemplifies how pre-existing representations of God in a Durkheimian sense turn into individual social representations by developing personal knowledge. The positive impact on identity principles (i.e. self-esteem and efficacy, continuity, distinctiveness) would seem to explain how a person is attracted to and takes on the charismatic persona.

Nigeria’s Pentecostal Third Public and Progressive Democratic Transformation
Femi Kolapo, University of Guelph, Guelph, Ontario, Canada

Applying Peter Ekeh's now classic theoretical insight into the dual nature of post colonial public space in Africa, I argue that in recent times, Nigeria's leading Pentecostal organizations have created a third public – Pentecostal third Public – a public whose impact on democratization I argue to lack significance. Guided by a smug moral-religious ethos that is salvationist, and operating in a context in which this third Pentecostal public is closed in on its membership who interact with each other using a Pentecostal lingo, the sphere operates rather outside of and parallel to the first Public. I argue that Nigeria's Pentecostal movement and its third public, benefit of any worthwhile ramifying or underlining political theology capable of linking their political wishlist to more effective structures and programmes of secular organizations and to more politically orientated religious bodies, has in the three decades since it emerged been rather ineffective as a major player in the creation of democratic change. The third Public's self-congratulatory sense of pious antagonism to state corruption or government inefficiency, its social and economic networks that transcend the local national boundaries, and its leadership with a status approximating to that of the nation's President and global CEOs of secular corporations, create a sense of sufficiency and achievement. This sense of divine achievement and sufficiency, together with its internal politics, allures many Pentecostal members to disdain the “paltry” “filthy” and corrupted politics of the civil Public, the substantive sphere of political decision making, rather than engaging in it in terms that directly challenge it.

Religion and Entrepreneurship from 19th-century Quebec to 21st-century France
Catherine Hinault, PRAG d’Anglais, Centre de Langues, Université Rennes 2, Bretagne, France

The French Canadians who dared transgress confessional boundaries in 19th-century Quebec remained true, by and large, to their linguistic in-group. Their shift towards a new confessional paradigm, however, went hand in hand with the reorganization of a community ethos that laid bare the hold of a Protestant-driven modernity on the new converts, complete with the spread of Reason, education, technical innovation, individualism, and entrepreneurship. Among the most interesting contributors to L'Aurore, the interdenominational French-Protestant weekly, in 1908. one Louis-Philippe Dupré, a 43-year old lawyer, stands out as a reforming figure capable of skillfully and forcefully conveying the French-Protestant creed to its readers while being still registered as Catholic in the 1911 Census. The anglophobia that pervaded French Canadian Protestantism goes all the way back to 18th-century France and the celebrated “superiority of Protestant nations” (Baubérot, Mathieu, 2002), which the French Canadian Protestants editors of L'Aurore credited, almost thirty years before Max Weber did, to a Protestant ethos emphasizing temperance, rationalised action and individual initiative, drawing their prototypical work ethic from the writings of Emile de Laveleye, a Belgian economist converted to Protestantism in the 1870s. Dupré's Laveleyan analysis of the ongoing economic anemia of Quebec is no exception, but it is balanced by a nationalist stance that makes the qualitative analysis of his articles in L'Aurore enlightening from a socio-anthropological perspective.

Israel and the Islamist Challenge: Old Dilemmas, New Approaches
Suheir Daoud, Coastal Carolina University, Conway, South Carolina, United States

Based on the British Defense Regulations from the British Mandate for Palestine, the State of Israel outlawed The Islamic Movement in Israel-Northern Faction (IMNF), accusing the group of incitement, racism and terrorism. The purpose of this article is to explain Israel’s decision to outlaw the movement and to examine the methods and strategies adopted by the IMNF that prompted the state’s actions. I argue that outlawing the IMNF represents a dramatic shift in Israeli policy for two main reasons: first, because for decades Israel had been characterized by a reluctance to take decisive action against a group whose direct involvement in terrorism has never been proven, and secondly, because historically, Israel had viewed Arab nationalism, not Islamism, as its main threat. I rely on the Trapped Minority model, which suggests that trapped minorities are alienated and marginalized on two different fronts, within their home state and their mother nation, in order to explain IMNF methods that eventually provoked the policy change. I draw upon interviews with key figures from the IMNF and other Arab political figures and activists, the movement’s publications, and available literature to support my arguments.

Possible Reconciliations between Freedom of Religion and Gender Equality
Dania Suleman, Université du Québec à Montréal, Montreal, Québec, Canada

My paper would focus on my Master's thesis, which addresses the potential constitutional tension between gender equality and freedom of religion within the Canadian context, with an outlook on the European dynamics relating to freedom of religion. This interdisciplinary thesis combines theoretical frameworks founded equally in the fields of law, feminist theory, and the sociology of religion, in order to consider the constitutional tension between identity perspectives, feminism, and law. With this in mind, my thesis provides a framework to address this issue which concerns me and from which I wish to propose an avenue toward reconciling different critiques. From here, I take into account the manner by which the judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada and the civil courts address requests for reasonable accommodations, as well as public policies that handle freedom of religion. I subsequently address the significant differences between radical feminism and postcolonial feminism as they relate to the place of women within a religion. The constitutional tension between religious freedom and gender equality tends to be present at this level. In my thesis, I suggest that postcolonial feminism is a valuable theoretical framework to use when reconciling demands for religious accommodation while respecting gender equality.

Religious Change around the World: Trends across Time and Countries Since 1991
Tom W. Smith, NORC at the University of Chicago, Chicago, Illinois, United States

The International Social Survey Program (ISSP) has conducted three rounds on religion (in 1991, 1998, 2008) and is about to do a fourth round in 2018. It has conducted nationally-representative samples in over 50 countries and expects to cover over 60 countries in 2018. The ISSP studies major religious beliefs (e.g. in God, the nature of God, afterlife) and behavior (e.g. praying, attending religious services, visiting a temple/shrine, being a member of a religion), the relationship between religions and the state/politics, and the social functions of religion (e.g. caring for the needy, promoting fellowship, socialization). Some special issues are also examined such as the role of gender in religion. Special attention is paid to the role of cohort turnover in explaining religious change.

Translating Spirituality: The Reinterpretation of Buddhism in Nineteenth-Century United States
Constance Chen, Loyola Marymount University, Los Angeles, California, United States

During the late nineteenth century, rapid industrialization created a sense of displacement amongst various middle-class Americans. Hoping to find a refuge from their increasingly mechanized world, they turned to Asia in search of inspiration. More specifically, many of them became enthralled with Buddhism, which held out the promise of individual salvation as well as national revitalization. Through in-depth analyses of published writings, personal papers, institutional records, and other historical documents from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, this paper will address the ways in which Westerners’ fascination with Buddhism led to the reinterpretation of the Asian religion for their own cultural and ideological needs amidst dramatic transformations taking place on both sides of the Pacific. While cultural critic Edward Said’s monumental treatise on Orientalist discourses suggests an insurmountable chasm between us/the West and them/the East, a distinctive form of Orientalism took place within the United States. Instead of marginalizing Otherness, certain Americans embraced it in their effort to invent a “New Buddhism,” thereby reshaping the transmission and the study of the religion throughout Asia and the West.

<td>Practice, Ritual, and Faith&lt;br&gt;Las Caminatas por la Paz as Epistemological Practice: How Popular Catholicism Makes Meaning of Suffering and Practices Healing&lt;br&gt;Jennifer Owens-Jofré, Graduate Theological Union, Berkeley, California, United States&lt;br&gt;I use participant observation and in-depth interviews to grasp the process by which a Latinx Catholic parish in the greater Los Angeles area (CPLA) that has been afflicted by gang violence for four generations moves from suffering toward healing. In doing so, I describe las caminatas por la paz (the peace walks), a nonviolent witness to peace in their neighborhood that lay Latina women leaders in the community initiated in the early 1980s. The caminatas are the public prayer arm of a social service para-system these women created through their parish, a para-system the failures of trickle-down economies and a punitive juvenile justice system have made necessary. Further, I apply Orlando Espín’s notion of popular religion as an epistemology of suffering to the context of CPLA, arguing that the caminatas make meaning of the current reality of suffering while practicing a new way of being community rooted in restorative justice.&lt;br&gt;Religious Community and Socialization, The Politics of Religion&lt;br&gt;Social Work Practice: An Historical Analysis of Religious and Spiritual Underpinnings&lt;br&gt;Guia Calicdan-Apostle, Stockton University, Galloway, New Jersey, United States&lt;br&gt;The social work profession was founded on the religious and spiritual values of the Christian and Jewish faiths. Ultimately, social work exemplifies authentic engagement in humanity with the goal of attaining social justice and human rights. This presentation traces the history and roots of social work via the fundamental concepts of religion and spirituality. The dangers of superficial Americanization in social work’s inclusive approach towards establishing a just and empathetic world are also explored.&lt;br&gt;The Politics of Religion&lt;br&gt;Losing Faith in Stages: An Analysis of the European Social Survey Data on the Transition from Faith to Secularism&lt;br&gt;Michael J. These high rankings for religiosity, however, are relative. Most countries in Europe have long been secular and the three countries listed above are rapidly following suit. Following Voas (2016) on &quot;fuzzy fidelity&quot; as a transitional stage on the journey from faithfulness to faithlessness, the authors present a cogent analysis of the data of 8 rounds the European Social Survey on religious practice and spirituality. The European Social Survey (ESS) is an academically driven cross-national survey that has been conducted across Europe since its establishment in 2001. Every two years, face-to-face interviews are conducted with newly selected, cross-sectional samples. The survey measures the attitudes, beliefs and behaviour patterns of diverse populations in more than thirty nations. This paper indicates the nature of the secularization trends in Europe and considers how the diminished religious beliefs, belonging and behaviour will impact on civil society.&lt;br&gt;Religious Foundations</td>

Alternatively, this paper argues for stressing the message using process thought. This paper argues His message is what Jesus was trying to teach his followers rather than the Jesus story that later theologians created as Christianity. By looking at the Jesus message as process thought, His message becomes quite clear and very practical. Without process thought, it is confused and only somewhat practical. With process thought, His message is a set of coherent practical lesson on how to approach the task of increasing human internal spiritual awareness and thus always move the person, and eventually society, toward an ever greater positive spirituality. The strength of this outcome is the clarity it gives His message and the usefulness it is to the person and persons following His message. The next step is for the Christian religious community is to become aware of this approach to interpreting the Jesus message. The implications for society is a Christian community that fosters within its self a process of teaching it members to be more spiritually aware and thus be better persons for themselves and society.&lt;br&gt;Religious Foundations</td>

Mystical Musings at the Time of War: Ayatollah Khomeini's Mystical Poetry
Ahsan Najafian, Stanford University, Stanford, California, United States

In a ghazal composed in 1986, amidst the Iran-Iraq war and seven years after the 1979 Islamic Revolution of Iran, we follow the poet as he kisses “the hand of the Sheikh who called me an Infidel” and thanks “the judge who imprisoned me for being drunk,” as these acts of banishment and punishment have led the poet to the Zoroastrian wine seller, who “with a sip of wine, quenched my thirst for the two Worlds.” We can easily read these lines as a sign of the poet’s frustration with the spiritual hypocrisy he witnesses in the post-revolutionary Iran; however, this analysis crumbles as soon as we find the identity of the poet: Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the political and spiritual leader of the Islamic revolution, the Supreme Leader of the country and the Guardian of the Jurists. Although Khomeini’s political activities have drawn a great amount of attention, his works in the “nonpolitical” sphere in general, and his poems in particular, have remained mainly unnoticed. The poems are composed in the classical form of ghazal and are heavily influenced by Rumi and Hafez. The apparent incompatibility between Khomeini’s uncharacteristically antimonic poems and his political persona, provides an opportunity to investigate a number of relevant issues regarding the text and context. Can these poems shed light on some hidden aspects of Khomeini’s politics? Or should we concede that there is not an iota of truth in the poems and such antiestablishmentarian themes are nothing but conventions of a highly stylized genre? My paper examines these questions through a study of a few of Khomeini’s poems as a platform to problematize the simplistic dichotomy of political Islam and mystical Islam.

After the Apocalypse: Critical Agency and the Church after the Black Death
Gregory Zacharia, Macalester College, Saint Paul, Minnesota, United States

When the Black Death struck the European mainland in 1347, the Catholic Church held dominion over the minds of Europeans and their understandings of both life and death. For generations, that position had granted the Church great influence over the practice of medicine, which produced a widespread excess of faith (endemic to individuals both outside the Church and within its institutions) in the ability of the Church to manage sickness and disease. This fundamental assumption suffered devastating challenges in the fourteenth century when the Church found itself utterly unprepared to stop the spread of plague across the continent. An examination of the literary record suggests that by exposing vice and ineptitude within the Church and its officials, the disease rendered them vulnerable to unprecedented criticism and skepticism from the public. However, as a crucial boundary of this transformation, public understanding of the realm of death and the afterlife remained firmly within the domain of the Church.

Beatitudes and Liberation Psychology: Translating Scripture to Social Justice in Community Psychology
Jason Ashe, University of Maryland, Baltimore County, Baltimore, Maryland, United States

As one of Jesus’s more historically significant exhortations, the Beatitudes bolster an understanding of Christian kingdom in the context of community fellowship and social equality. These blessings anchor a values-based pedagogy that identifies sociopolitical corruptness in the context of marginalization and oppression. However, banal interpretations of eschatological hope persist, apathetically reifying the status quo and not demanding social justice for the least of these. We must then question the Church’s mission as participants with “God’s in-breaking” in present day injustices. Considering the ferocious political state of American race relations, clergy and academicians can no longer complacently pontificate liberation. To coalesce psychologists and religious for social justice partnership, the current presentation will draw on emerging, distinct branches of thought to outline theoretical and practical foundations from liberation frameworks. Black Liberation Theology and Community Psychology comprise overlapping principles that acknowledge invisibilized and overt manifestations modes of oppression; inspire action-oriented social revolution; and honor strengths-based assessments of communities, recognizing resilience and tenacity as central to the experiences of the socially disinherrited. This paper will challenge eschatological hermeneutics in the Beatitudes, introduce lexicon and foundations of CP and BLT for interdisciplinary dialogue, and inspire a collective thrust for liberation beginning within Christian ethics.

Aesthetics of Immorality and Sociopolitical Engagement: The Haunting "Spirit" of Friedrich Nietzsche
William Hetrick, Bethel University, McKenzie, Tennessee, United States

Friedrich Nietzsche argued that Christianity represented a false conception of spirituality because it put the "next world" above this one. Conventional morality has narrowed our perceptual horizons, and thus, sociopolitical engagement has been unduly limited or constrained. As reason and natural instinct are undermined by the quest for the hereafter, important questions such as "Why be public-spirited" become points of suspicion, and denigration. Nietzsche’s turn against traditional morality can be seen in his reversal of the established notions of virtue and vice. For example, beauty and sensuality are to be celebrated, and not feared or loathed. Discovery of new kinds of beauty are indeed possible once the "morally good" is abandoned, and the "wild landscape" of the "evil man" is explored. Sociopolitical engagement assumes a dramatically different ethical posture given that the "spell of the Dionysian" re-establishes the bond between man and man, and reconciles man with nature. Nietzsche’s "will to power as art" serves as a catalyst for social change. The current paper uses Nietzsche’s major works in order to first re-conceptualize spirituality from a non-Christian viewpoint, and secondly to use that analysis as a linchpin for an alternative perspective on sociopolitical engagement with a decidedly aesthetic foundation.

<td>It is not possible to solve global problems and preserve the biosphere unless all people living on this planet get together behind this global cause. The literature offers a wealth of economic, technological and organizational management models to help guide humanity out of the current global crisis. To do this, we need the right political will and moral motivation, which would ensure a civilizational compromise that would unite humanity in the face of global threats. Planetary ethics could serve as the basis for this human motivation. It provides a moral philosophy that empowers people in their efforts to build a biocompatible civilization on the principles of conservation, humanism and social justice. Developed by the Planetary Development Institute, Dubai, UAE, planetary ethics derives from Russian cosmism. Nikolay Fedorov, Vladimir Vernadsky, Konstantin Tsioikovsky and others focused on such issues as ascending evolution, the connection of the Earth to the universe, the expansion of man into space, victory over death, chaos and entropy. Back in the early 20th century, cosmists discussed a united WE-humanity and the principles of human kinship with the universe. The Planetary Project seeks to revive and develop the legacy of Russian cosmists.</td>

<td>Although the United States claims to be a nation that separates church and state, the same cannot be said for religion and politics. These two spheres undoubtedly overlap, if not symbiotically coexist, in the American culture. While it is questionable as to whether religion should or should not factor into the political arena of America, religion has been a prominent player in the annals of U. S. history. Examples of the ways in which the religious current brought about positive change in America include both the abolition of slavery and the Civil Rights Movement. (Although one should note that religious arguments were made on both sides of these historic events in American history.) In both of these instances, the religious voice worked as a prophet to the government, proclaiming the injustice in society. In instances where religion is able to prophetically alter the government, both church and state are strengthened. However, religion has often been negatively influenced by politics. When power is within grasp, convictions are often compromised. While politics needs the morality that religion can provide, religion does not need the power with which politics tempts. This paper examines the ways two camps of Protestantism in the US has impacted American politics, and how these two camps continue to be prominent players in American politics today.</td>

<td>Because non-Islamic government in Malaysia is historically linked to British colonialism, many Christian Dusun I encountered during fieldwork would romantically conjure representations of “Orang Putih” (white person) as a productive locus of knowledge and power. This picture is partly formed by the perception of the “Orang Putih” as an essentially Christian figure, who fought the odds to bring people the word of God back “before there was any religion in Borneo.” Drawing on my 18 months of research in the state of Sabah, I suggest that focus on the interpretation of whiteness as a particular expression of “Christian modernity” in the representational economy of postcolonial Malaysia offers an approach to understanding hope, what Miyazaki (2004:4) identifies as “a method that unites different forms of knowing.” Following Bashkow (2006) and Keane (2007), I argue that while contemporary interactions with white people are ultimately morally ambivalent, the semiotic construction of “Orang Putih” indexes political possibility for Christian Dusun groups.</td>

<td>According to Joseph Smith’s Views of the Power and Policy of the Government, Andrew Jackson was the last great President of the United States of America. The world Joseph Smith and early Mormonism emerged onto had been fundamentally culturally, politically, and socially shaped by Jacksonian democracy. In many ways, Joseph’s own life story embodied the common-man narrative that Andrew Jackson had championed. Smith was born into the lower ranks of society with little education or advantage but had risen through the ranks of society, becoming the Mayor of Nauvoo and the Lieutenant General of the Nauvoo Legion. Yet while scholars have placed emphasis on Joseph’s role as a prophet and the leader of a persecuted new religion in understanding his bid for the presidency in 1844, Smith’s political ideas can be understood within the criticisms fostered by Andrew Jackson’s presidency. Both were interested in expanding the boundaries of the United States, both were firm believers in the executive power of the presidency, and both were viewed as champions of the so-called “common man.” This paper will highlight the ways in which Joseph Smith can be better understood not just as a product of the Second Great Awakening but also the age of Jacksonian democracy, particularly in his political views and his bid for the United States presidency in the election of 1844.</td>

Global Narratives

Logos of Christian Faith: The Essence of Christianity in a Post-Christian Culture
Paolo Gamberini, University of San Francisco, San Francisco, California, United States

Through globalization and greater exchange, religious identities are meeting and facing each other on a regular and in a very speedy way. As intercultural and religious plurality made possible the rise of Christianity, so in our age Christians must continue to be in dialogue with other faith traditions and be moved to give up ingrained prejudices, to revise preconceived ideas, and even sometimes to allow the understanding of their faith to be purified. By an analysis of Christology and Comparative theology, the purpose of my paper is to outline the theological essence for a Christian self-understanding which is able to move beyond an apologetic and exclusive form of logos. To put on the mind of Christ means to move beyond a “zero-sum” logic and embrace a “non-dual” logos which encounters the religious other “in spirit and truth.” In such Christian logos, formed by kenosis and agape, the other is no longer excluded or dissolved in the “silem” but acknowledged in its uniqueness as “ipse.” Through the knowledge of the religion of the other and entering its spiritual tradition, Christians will better understand their faith, redefine their confessional boundaries no more in hostile but in dialogical way, and become bridge-builders in our contemporary pluralistic society.

Religious Foundations

Techno-Mysticism, Philip K. Dick, and the Closed Society
Aaron French, University of California Davis, Davis, California, United States

This paper rejects Weber’s contention, asserting instead that new media and ubiquitous computing constitute contemporary enchantments. However, this new media enchantment is built on power abuse and psychological manipulation. In Bergsonian terms, our modern society has become a “closed society” from which only a “true mystic” can provide the way out. This mystic must be literate in modern forms of enchantment and must be thoroughly conversant with science, new media concepts, and technological innovations if s/he is to lead us to a more open society. S/he can only do this by envisioning a new mythology, a capacity which Bergson describes as “fabulation.” Though initially painted in somewhat negative terms by Bergson, fabulation has achieved a more positive reconstruction by subsequent scholars. This paper investigates what Bergson means by the term “mystic” and what role “fabulation” might play in leading the way out of a closed society; it then analysis the work of science fiction writer Philip K. Dick to illustrate how Bergson’s notion of fabulation, and its derivatives by subsequent scholars, might be reinterpreted to indicate ways in which modern “mystics” would fabricate a new future tending toward the open society.

The Politics of Religion

Advancing International Religious Freedom: The Catholic Way
Rafal Milerski, Ludwig-Maximilian University, Munich, Germany

In 1965 the Catholic Church, responding to globalization and progressing pluralization, promulgated a Declaration on Religious Freedom, which besides defending the freedom of conscience affirmed the responsibility of the state to defend religious freedom. The key focus of this paper is to analyze how this theological declaration translates into the Holy See’s – the Catholic Church’s central authority – practical policies for advancing religious freedom in the political realm. The paper analyses the Catholic Church’s three-fold international engagement in this area: a) by means of its legal and political personality under international law to advance religious freedom by means of bilateral agreements and diplomatic work at the UN and the OSCE b) by its theological teaching and c) by encouraging the work of Catholic-inspired international NGOs. The paper is based on the study of the Holy See’s policies and is supplemented by findings from “expert interviews” and archival research conducted in Washington D.C. and in Rome in the spring and fall of 2016 and 2017. The paper concludes that while theological teaching is the primary preoccupation of the Church, the “teaching of religious freedom” is often conditioned by the narrower contexts of national sentiments and histories of the local churches. Despite the latter, the Holy See itself consistently and effectively advances the right to religious freedom by means of an “integrated approach” present in the work of its departments and their policies.

<td>The purpose of this work is to reclaim a Catholic social teaching of self-love as rooted in Christ's second great commandment, to love your neighbor as yourself. This paper systematically examines the subverted psychology of women who are denied a path of self-fulfilment due to the over emphasis on self-emptying. This paper examines the feminine from the psychological framework of Marion Woodman, the feminist theology of Elizabeth Johnson, and the theological aesthetics of Hans Urs von Balthasar. The implications of this work serve to bring light to a dimension of Catholic social teaching that may expand the mission of the Church through self-love. The goal is to reclaim a spiritual practice of self-love, according to Christ's second great commandment. The purpose of this work is provide a spiritual practice for young women so that she may encounter the beauty of God's divine love in every dimension of her life. This work is critical due to the destructive issues facing adolescent women today such as abortion, drug addiction, and eating disorders. The outcome will generate a Catholic social teaching of self-love for young women today that is grounded in the feminist principles of mutuality, practicality, and creativity.</td>

<td>Religious intolerance spreads hate and ignites racism and terrorism. Divisive, constructed ideologies have forged a world of chaos and terror. Muslims and Christians fearing one another, hating one another, killing one another in thought and deed. Can harmonious religious pluralism really exist within our trans-national communities? This jointly-authored paper holds, that by adhering to the foundational theme of love as presented in Islamic and Christian sacred texts, these two religious communities can, and are meant, to live in harmony. Through close-reading analysis of the Quran and the New Testament we elucidate that “love” is the quintessence of both Islam and Christianity and that “to love” — not only like-minded followers but all — is a mandate. We maintain, evidenced with textual support, that a peacable pluralistic vast community is promoted and possible to the adherents of these sacred texts. This paper is an irenic work to invite discussion of peacable connections between Muslims and Christians. We show how Christians and Muslims are not compromising the teaching of their respective scriptures to love the other and rejoice in religious pluralism. This unique presentation invites continued conversations and dialogue imperative to continued movements towards global peace.</td>

<td>This paper attempts to explore the sociopolitical context in which the formation of religious practicing and networking among indigenous communities took place in medieval China. Beginning in the fifth century, a new type of religious community emerged in the western regions of the central plain. In these communities, lay practitioners erected stone stelae as their medium for liturgical and scriptural practices, on which dedicatory prayers were inscribed. Obviously, these epigraphical sources are crucial clues to the religious mentalities of lay people. Nevertheless, they also embody an access to the complex sociopolitical background in which they were formulated. Even more pertinently, these stelae were not only the product of religious inclinations but also of sociopolitical responses. As the dedicatory prayers show, these epigraphical materials, though composed in various regions, revealed a shared textual pattern as well as a similar narrative style in expressing their aspirations and motivations, which seemed to have been shaped and formed by a much greater hidden force. Firstly, these dedicatory prayers, rhetorically and conceptually speaking, seemed to abide by a particular range of religious scriptures which served as the canons of the community. Secondly, these stelae which were erected in a politically unstable period seemed to be interwoven into a broader sociopolitical context, in which they were shaped and formed under the influence of political and societal powers. It is by the above considerations this paper attempts to explore the landscape of these indigenous communities, both politically and societally. It will place a particular focus on the implicit interrelationship among these indigenous communities, the complex influential context of these communities within the broader sociopolitical entities. It is in this context this paper will begin with an overview of the historical background of the emergence of these indigenous communities to set the scene. The second part will attempt to reconstruct the dynamic interactions among these communities, focusing mainly on the underlying social and symbolic networks in which they were connected. It then proceeds to a textual analysis of the stele inscriptions, in an attempt to explore the engagement of political and societal forces in these communities, which in turn shaped their ritual activities. It will argue that the inclination of praying for the kingship in the dedicatory prayers, though not necessarily a mandatory order from the imperial power imposed upon lay people, virtually reflected the sociopolitical influences upon them, by which they were shaped within the context of the struggles of religious entities and political entities and reflected as a compromising response to these struggles. Finally, this paper will conclude with the suggestion that understanding of social framework is useful for reading the communal living societies of lay people at that period of time. Religious Community and Socialization</td>

<td>This paper will consider whether one consequence of globalization upon religion is the break-down of denominational identity. The 2017 title &quot;The Bible in American History&quot; argues that in modern times &quot;denominations are losing much of their traditional cultural authority, technology is changing reading and cognitive habits, and subjective experience is continuing to eclipse textual authority as the mark of true religion.&quot; Indeed, one contributing factor for such changes is the dramatic evolution in recent years in the way in which Christians access intellectual and educational resources. There has been a homogenization, I will argue, of the ways in which resources are both created and identified by consumers. With the rise of the internet and of Amazon.com as a main distributor of books, Christian publishers have been pinched financially and can no longer take risks on unknown authors or less marketable proposals. Christian bookstores, meanwhile, long in decline, have given way to on-line competitors. Likewise, Christian seminaries—long a staple way new authors and books became more widely known—are struggling to find their place in secularizing, globalizing America. In the wake of all these changes a more consumerist, individualistic approach to Christian reading has manifested. This paper will argue that such changes are critically important for religious identity in America, not least because they are one contributor to the loosening of denominational identity.</td>

<td>The vocal and constant support of Donald Trump by Christian (majority Evangelical) churches in pre- and post-election period have left various religious practitioners and global audience confused (Helmke, 2016; Jung, 2016; Merritt, 2016). While the majority of white evangelicals voted for Trump (Medhurst, 2017), there were those Christians (Evangelical and otherwise) and ex-Christians who strongly opposed the marriage between Trump and the Evangelical leadership (Medhurst, 2017; Morris, 2017). Especially after Trump's seemingly inadequate respond to the terrorist event at Charlottesville, which led many CEO and various organizational leaders to step away, resign, or disapprove of his actions, the support or silent acceptance by Evangelical leaders increased the disappointment and anger some of the Christian practitioners already felt. #EmptyThePews started as a Twitter hashtag and movement by Chris Stroop in mid-August 2017, shortly after the protest at Charlottesville. Stroop, a prominent blogger, online author, and a professor at University of South Florida, launched the hashtag with a specific goal in mind: to show Evangelical leaders that their support of Trump or racist, sexist, and xenophobic behaviors will lead them to lose their congregations. In his words, Stroop is trying to lead people into leaving their churches in protest over the church's support of Trump: &quot;Noting that almost nothing will get most evangelicals' attention apart from declining church attendance, last night I took to Twitter to exhort any wavering members of conservative evangelical churches, or indeed any churches in Trumpism and white supremacy, to take now as a moment to leave those churches in protest, as publicly and vocally as possible. (Stroop, August 17th, 2017) The hashtag elicited moderate responses from Twitter community, with the original call to action from August 16th being retweeted 1203 times, and liked 2065 times. The hashtag itself has been used daily since, by Stroop and other supporters. As of December 2017, there were more than 24,000 unique tweets using the hashtag. This presentation will examine the dominant themes and voices using this hashtags. It will show how the hashtag is used to foster a community, to raise awareness, to deal with trauma, and to form a resistance. The importance of the hashtag from a scholarly perspective is both in its attempt to physically move people, and the hashtag as a point of departure to examine the current interactions between organized Christian religion, politics, Trumpism and resistance.</td>

<td>In this paper, I examine new interactions between a religious community and non-sectarian people through the spread of kirtan, focusing on a new attempt of The International Society for Krishna Consciousness (ISKCON) in Vancouver. Some previous studies have reported that the transformation of ISKCON over decades, however, grassroots activities by younger devotees in recent years are not really investigated. Kirtan or kirtan yoga i.e., an important religious practice of the Hinduism has been gaining popularity over decades around the world, especially in the West. I conducted a survey of &quot;Spirituality and Music in the Global Age&quot; in 2016, with the cooperation of &quot;Kirtan Vancouver.&quot; Organizers have been trying to spread kirtan and Hindu philosophy outside of the parent organization, using social media network. The results show three main points. First, participants have diverse religious backgrounds. Second, most participants have a high expectation of the connectedness with others. Third, new participants do not even know what kirtan exactly is before they experience it, but many of them become repeat participants. In conclusion, I point out that younger devotees’ unrestricted activity through social media have been enhancing non-sectarian people’s accessibility to the religious community compared with the past; from a missionary work to a sharing of devotion.</td>

<td>The twentieth century set up dramatically new socio-cultural and axiological scenarios with its two world wars and the expansion of the most powerful international totalitarian and militant atheistic system ever known -soviet communism. As a response to these dramatic human and socio-cultural events, the Roman Catholic Church, at the Second Vatican Council (1962-1965), recognized the need for a renovated reflection on human values, world views, and the relationship between the Church and secularized society. As a consequence it decided to open up to new liturgical forms and ways of expressing faith. One of the visible “signs of the times” of those changes was the introduction of popular music in Catholic churches. This music was performed on electric guitars and percussion instruments. Behind the Iron Curtain these changes were noticeable, but qualitatively and quantitatively different from those in the West, since the Catholic church in communist countries has to deal with more or less open, but always hostile, oppression. This paper examines the case of a pop-cultural movement initiated in an industrial neighborhood of a densely populated working-class area of Upper Silesia, Poland, between 1982 and 1988. This musical and artistic phenomenon was an original form of new religious and spiritual expression that shaped world views of an entire generation of post-communist young Catholics in Polish Silesia and beyond.</td>

<td>What the Believer Who Believes Must Know about Beliefs Related to God</td>

<tr>

<tr>
<td></td>
<td>The truth of what we believe about God is important only in the context of the truth of why we choose to believe in God. To understand the truth of why &quot;what is said&quot; is held as true, is the beginning of understanding beliefs related to God. Anselm argued that God is definable and Plantinga argued the concept of God is warranted as such believable (Plantinga, 2001). In this paper an attempt is made to define what the believer who believes must know about beliefs related to God. They are fourfold: firstly, God is knowable. The intentionality of consciousness, (Rosenthal, 2002) allows us to be aware of both contingent and non-contingent beings. Secondly, God is definable. &quot;Access consciousness&quot; or the reportability of consciousness (Ned Block, 1998) allows us to define &quot;what is said&quot; and held as true by definition. Thirdly, The concept of God is believable. Why we choose to believe provides us the basis for what we believe about God. As such, we can hold beliefs related to God with or without: against or regardless of evidence. Fourthly, while God is knowable, definable and believable, God is unidentifiable. Unidentifiable, because while God is definable the definition of God does not provide for any identity; while God is believable, the believer does not possess the ability to identify God, should God encounter us. Anselm's definition, Leibniz's question, Plantinga's warrant, Kant's postulates, Pascal's wager, and James's &quot;will to believe&quot; does not provide for the identity of God. So what the believer must know about beliefs related to God is that God is knowable, definable and believable but unidentifiable should God encounter us. As such, the truth of why we choose to believe in God must always take precedence over the truth of what we believe about God.</td>

<td>Man can be understood as homo theologicus. Man's thinking can be apprehended as man's theological way of being. The origin of theological (a pre-theological) thinking is ultimately man's onto-existential condition as &quot;being in the world&quot; towards theadic Transcendence through death in the search for absolute Meaning. Transcendence is for man the perfect union of the ontological (Being) and epistemological (Meaning) dimensions. In an analogical relationship with the identity between kalon kai agathon as present in Plato's thought, there is also an essential correspondence between Being and Meaning that has ontological precedence over the correspondence between Being and time. In a first moment, we expose Martin Heidegger's main onto-existential categories as developed in Being and Time. In the horizon opened by Edith Stein, E. V. Frankl, Karl Rahner, and P. T. de Chardin we critically approach Heidegger's &quot;anthropological ontology&quot; aiming to reach a deeper understanding of man's existence concerning its condition of homo theologicus by developing a &quot;theadic ontology.&quot; Following this ontological/epistemological Analytic, we arrive at a provisional general definition of man as homo theologicus that can be ontologically understood proper only as thank-full thinking in the perpetual celebration of Meaning.</td>

<td>Naming is a fundamental process in our societies as it helps us to communicate and address more appropriately things, phenomena, people etc. At the same time, it is a potent tool of control. By naming, we establish the boundaries of groups and individual personalities. This is the case for transgender people and transvestites as defining and socially and legally accepting or not their “social names” – in other words, the names they choose to use in their daily lives, usually in contrast with the sex they were born - constitutes a tool of either controlling the way they move around in our societies or improving their standards of living. In 2016, in Brazil, a controversy over this topic gained momentum when former President Dilma Roussef signed a decree that allowed transgender people and transvestites to use their social name in all public federal institutions. A strong opposition came from different sectors of Brazilian society. One of them was the Congress Christian bench that helped to voice concerns about the allegedly dangers of such decree, namely the risks of rendering all the children gays, lesbians or trans people, changes in males and females social roles etc. Moral panic spread and the decree started to face more serious opposition on the floor of the Senate and the House of Representatives. In this paper we will present the arguments used by Christian congressman and congresswomen to fight the above-mentioned decree and show how this opposition was connected to broader questions related to a slow but steady decrease of secularism in Brazilian republican institutions.</td>

The Scope of Prophetic Messages: Imagining a Prophet for a New Era
Fiona Dougherty, Western Michigan University, Kalamazoo, Michigan, United States
Prophets within the Abrahamic traditions, not limited to Jesus and Muhammad, were seen by the followers of their time and those who adhere to their messages today, as wise, spiritual teachers, speaking on matters of morality and righteousness. But as we can see from ancient texts, the morality and righteousness they spoke of was not always limited to the sphere of individual conduct. More often than not, the prophets of old spoke of matters pertaining to politics, social structures, and economic inequality, and they did not mince words. Fast forward to today’s political, social, and economic climate. No country is a utopia, and the Kingdom of Heaven has not yet come to earth. Peace and justice, although noble ideals, are not always carried out to fulfillment. What would the Abrahamic prophets have to say? Or better yet, if there were a new prophet, for these new tumultuous times, what would their role in reordering these structures be? What were the qualifications for the ancient prophets, and what qualities would we look for if we were expecting another, in a new, postmodern world? These are the topics I will covering, using textual analysis across traditions, imagining answers that honor the prophets of the past, their messages, and attempting to evaluate their meaning for a modern world.

Cross and Abysmal Madness of God: Foucault and Apophatic Theology
Stephan Quarles, Graduate Theological Union, Berkeley, California, United States
The central symbol within the Christian tradition is the cross, which was the “scandal to the Jews and folly to the Gentiles” (1 Cor. 1:18-25). Today it has lost much of its scandalous nature through explanations ranging from atonement theories to the cross as a mechanism for state sponsored violence to inspire a social justice rallying cry. In reality, neither of these are ‘untrue’ about the symbolic function of the cross, yet both broad theories limit the ways the cross scandalizes Christian theology. I argue in this paper that Foucault’s concept of power/knowledge is essential to the continued work of apophatic theology, especially when placed within the discourse on the madness of the cross in History of Madness. Foucault does two rather unexpected yet profound readings of the cross through the lens of 1 Corinthians 1:18-25 and an obscure text of Nicholas of Cusa, On Wisdom. Foucault emphasizes that Christian theology and church practice have stripped the cross of its madness by bringing it in from the margins and making it absolutely knowable. The cross should stay on the margins continuing its radical power to subvert our expectations with an emphasis on its madness and apophatic character.

Radical Aesthetics: Romanticism, Religion, and Politics
Mark Cladis, Brown University, Providence, Rhode Island, United States
My paper presents a public aesthetics and poetics of religion that is central to British and American radical Romantic traditions. The paper’s focus is on the religious aesthetics of William Wordsworth’s work. The implications of this investigation are far-reaching. To learn about Wordsworth’s aesthetics is to learn about radical Romanticism and the intricate relation it forges between aesthetics, religion, and progressive democracy. The paper begins with a general account of radical Romanticism and highlights the importance of attending to its religious dimensions. Next, the paper turns to radical Romanticism’s aesthetics, giving special attention to Wordsworth. It then moves to compare radical religious aesthetics to more traditional accounts of aesthetics. Finally, it concludes by extending the category of radical aesthetics to include such authors as W. E. B. Du Bois, Annie Dillard, and Terry Tempest Williams as well as such performative, nonliterary aesthetics as found in public celebrations and protests (for example, an interfaith unity walk in which hundreds of people join hands and form a human chain, linking together the sacred spaces of Jewish, Christian, Muslim, and Baha’i communities). This, in turn, leads to a final reflection on the significance of religion in radical aesthetics.

Theist Deism: The "Process" of Process Theology
Jorge Muñoz, California State Los Angeles, Los Angeles, California, United States
Theist Deism aims to show God in a different light, as opposed to the Monarchical God who is constantly in charge of everyone’s life. Ian Barbour describes this Thomistic ideal as the perfect God (Barbour, 1997); E. L. Mascall argues in a similar vein about God’s perfection in terms of omniscience and omnipotence (Mascall, 1945). But this notion of a perfect monarch leads directly to the problem of suffering, free will, evil, chaos, etc. (See Hume, Dialogues X). There is too much disorder to proclaim a God involved in all aspects of individuals’ lives, let alone the universe. Science certainly has shown that for every miraculous event there is a plausible explanation (if not already a concrete scientific explanation). Thus it would appear that using God as a form of explanation is not supported by our knowledge of the world. Nevertheless, Deism does seem to allow for both, an evolutionary explanation of the universe, while allowing for God qua Creator. This paper seeks to explore what the "process" of Process Theology is and examine how God has vested interest in humanity as a rational unit, and not as individuals.

The Jurisprudence Trace behind DAESH Trench

Farhad Bayani, University of Tabriz, Tabriz, Iran

Religious fundamentalism is a return to pure religious thoughts, beliefs, laws, and identity in the era of Islamic authority. Given the ever-growing spread of religious fundamentalism and revitalism in today’s world, and especially in Islamic countries, the present article aims at studying the role of Sharia (jurisprudence) in tendency of people to Islamic fundamentalism thinking. Research method of the paper includes documentary method and grounded theory method. Two categories of data have been studied to evaluate the issue: jurisprudential rulings which can be pretext for Islamic fundamentalist movements and reasons of some Islamic fundamentalists which have been taken of this jurisprudential rulings or match them. Data on understanding the reasons for these individuals are collected through purposive sampling. Theoretical saturation is achieved after interviewing with 15 persons. In order to achieve the aim of the paper, on one hand some jurisprudential rulings, Jihad rulings specially, studied and on the other hand, the interviews analyzed by three-steps encoding process includes open, axial and selective encoding. Findings show that there is an adaption between some jurisprudential rulings and tendency of participants to fundamentalists thinking also, main reasons of them to support of Islamic fundamentalist are confronting to modernism, rebuilding of Islamic identity and founding Islamic state. Moreover, some of jurisprudential rulings can provide appropriate context for Islamic fundamentalist movements.

Transformative Power of Imaginative Prayer: Exploring the Spiritual Exercises of Ignatius of Loyola

Ally Kern, Azusa Pacific University, Azusa, California, United States

Throughout the history of Christianity there have been numerous iterations of prayer that utilize our imaginal capacity in various ways towards the aim of spiritual formation. The most evident demonstration of the transformative power of imaginative prayer is arguably found in St. Ignatius of Loyola in his seminal writing, The Spiritual Exercises. Through the variety of prayer practices Ignatius developed in the Exercitae we see that he exemplifies a spirituality characterized by an imaginative embodiment of Christ that leads towards redemptive engagement in the world. Through this concept—which he articulates as the “contemplative in action”—Ignatius employs the imagination as the definitive medium to intimately know self and God towards his ultimate purpose of inner transformation (Egan, 1995; Dupré &amp; Wiseman, 2001). Through visual imagination, then, one can effectively encounter and be transformed by Christ within the memories of one’s daily life, as well as the memory of God transcribed in Scripture (Byrne, 1991; Egan, 1995). An exploration of how Ignatius employs these themes of employing the capacities of imagination, affect, and memory in the Exercises is the objective of this paper. Beginning with a look at Ignatius’ personal story as the grounding for his indispensable tome on spirituality, followed by an investigation of his utilization of imagination as his primary framework for contemplative prayer, we will conclude with a discussion of Ignatius’ vision of transformation.

Religious Community and Socialization

The access to technology and to digital religion is an element that can foster the leadership of immigrant women. In this paper we aim to unveil the answer to this question. We present findings from a research with immigrant women from different faith communities living in the populated and multicultural neighborhood of Raval, in the city of Barcelona. Our methodology is based by a survey to 238 women of different origins and from different religions, which we complemented with six in-depth interviews. We aim to understand why there is a dearth of social contribution by female religious leaders in a socially and culturally Catholic place such as Barcelona. We found that women’s empowerment in the public sphere and their visibility will not be possible if they do not have their own digital tools. Characteristics such as lack of a smartphone (in the case of 34% of immigrant women) and no Twitter presence for 95% of them, bear directly on their presence in cyberspace as well as in their lived experiences. Digital competency (59% admit they do not have it) and sociolinguistic and cultural skills are also assessed. In addition, social elements are important in motivating them to expand their networks digitally. We found, however, that 58% of immigrant women use new technologies to talk to family in their home country. In this context, technology becomes a double-edged sword. Theoretic basis of the research is integrated by contributions on religion, gender and digital religion from authors as Nancy Fraser (1992), Lieszler Van Zoonen (1994), Saskia Sassen (1997), Heidi Campbell (2012), Stewart Hoover (2009) or Mia Lövheim (2015). The paper is a component within a larger project titled “Digital narratives. Gender, Immigration and Religion on the Move”, a project implemented by the Blanquerna Observatory on Media Religion and Culture in Barcelona together with the World Association for Christian Communication (WACC) and co-financed by Otto per Mille Valdesian Church in Italy.

The Politics of Religion

Anna Hamling, Culture and Media Studies, University of North Brunswick, Fredericton, New Brunswick, Canada

The images of the Black Madonna from Czestochowa (Poland), Guadalupe (Spain) and Guadalupe (Mexico) have been meaningful and powerful cultural icons in their respective countries from the time of their inception. There are still millions of people visiting and praying to them every year. What do these images mean? What are the causes of these icons’ influence on the Polish, Spanish and Mexican people alike in their respective countries? This study attempts to examine the historical and cultural significance of the devotional powers of three selected art works of Black Madonna.

Introduction to Convergence

Bishop Ryan Mackey, Central Christian College of Kansas, McPherson, Kansas, United States

For several decades there has been a stirring in the hearts of many Christians - across denominations and around the world - to find their way back to the roots of Christianity. One way this has been seen is in the “convergence movement.” The convergence movement seeks to unite Christians from the historic “streams,” or traditions, of the Church into one “river.” This talk will give a basic introduction to convergence, including its roots and hallmarks.

Falun Gong: A Practice for Health, Wellness and Beyond
Margaret Trey, Independent Researcher, United States
Falun Gong is a meditative practice, with elements from Buddhist and Taoist teachings, for overall mind-body and spiritual improvement. This session illustrates impact of Falun Gong supported by evidence-based knowledge. For millennia, meditative religious/spiritual disciplines have existed in various Eastern countries. These practices were handed down from masters to disciples—often in reclusive or monastic settings. Today, people seek these ancient practices for a variety of reasons. Through diligent practice, one not only attains spiritual transcendence but also health, wellness, and healing. Falun Gong—an ancient Chinese discipline suitable for modern times—is one such practice that is making its presence felt. Nearly 100 million people in over 70 countries practice it. Understanding Falun Gong and its impact on healing and therapy is thus pertinent in our progressively interconnected world. Various researchers observed a positive link between religion/spirituality and health. Others support the integration of religion/spiritual meditative disciplines with counseling, social work, and medical practice. The focus of this paper is to examine the effects of Falun Gong—its relevance in modern times. Using story examples from the author’s Hearts Uplifted research project, this paper aims to provide insight into Falun Gong and its benefits, by looking at the practice through the eyes of individuals who practice it. The paper does not seek to proselytize religious ideas but proposes to explore Falun Gong as healing and therapy.

Politics of Karma: Representation of "Good" and "Bad" Deaths in Bollywood Films
Souvik Mondal, Presidency University, Kolkata, India
Among all human events death is the most upsetting to their calculations, and conceivably religion alone was effective determining the calculability to settle down the unnerving effect of death. The concept of karma has provided this reliable calculability by assimilating every improbability into a meticulously articulate and extensive analysis of the individual life choices to create a binary of "good" and "bad" death. The judgement assuring a "good" demise at the end of a "good" life is established to be so functional that Hindi films have been replicating the same theme from its very beginning, starting from Raja Harishchandra, the first ever Indian film, to the present. As the doctrine of karma explains that every phenomenon is determined by its antecedents, and everything that occurs in the moral realm is preordained, idea of reincarnation has factually been verified to be convenient to answer the indeterminate questions accompanying "bad" deaths. However, over-representation of karma proves the domination of Hindu ideology in Bollywood, as Islamic or Christian philosophies of death have methodically been ignored in Hindi films which demonstrates the hegemony of Hindu ideology in Indian sociocultural space.

The Politics of Religion
Image of James Ensor as Ecce Homo,1891
Albert Alhadeff, University of Colorado Boulder, Boulder, Colorado, United States
Long known for his images of self on the Cross, spattered with blood and derided by the mob, James Ensor (1860-1949) viewed himself as a long suffering Christ. His images of himself as a crucified Christ are amongst his best known but also amongst his most enigmatic. Though no theologian he was well aware of Emile Littre’s 1839 The Life of Jesus (La vie de Jesus)—itself a translation of David Friedrich’s Strauss famous study Das Leben Jesu of 1835. My paper then intends to focus on Littre’s translation with Ensor’s images of self as Christ in mind, a study which will shed new light on a series of intriguing and most beautiful images.

The Body as a Temple
Human Body: Diversity from Within
Indira Y. Junghare, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minnesota, United States
Ancient philosophical traditions provided theories for socio-religious practices. Despite language-culture evolutions around the world, the impact of old ideologies on our thoughts, actions, and cultures lingers on. Some of the old concepts still seem to be useful for our modern-day living. In ancient Indian cultural tradition, the concept of a person was holistic, consisting of body, mind and spirit. The body was valued for its function and use. Bodies were categorized in various types: strong, beautiful, warm, cold, calm, and active. This categorization led to the development of various disciplinary fields, including Ayurvedic medicine and various systems of yoga, providing choice appropriate to the body type. This paper examines the concept of a person in terms of diverse bodies in the orthodox and heterodox philosophies of India and discusses its relationship to an individual’s total health. The saying: “One’s health is in one’s hands,” is indicative of the relationship.

Spiritual Faith and Recovery from Critical Illness: Five Year Follow-up

Liz Johnston, California Polytechnic State University, San Luis Obispo, California, United States

In 2012, 32 older adults who had recovered from critical illness were studied using qualitative and quantitative methods. Scales included the HADS A and B and the ETIC-7 scale. Many of the participants had near death experiences or spiritual visions during their illness. These phenomena will be discussed in depth. Social work clinical wisdom was used to evaluate the quantitative and qualitative data; this mixed methods data collection and combined analysis approach produced unique and illuminating results. Spiritual faith was found to be central to increased coping and psychological recovery after critical illness. The talk will describe the literature that supports the importance of faith in recovery from illness. Then, key concepts from the study will be defined and finally the effect of faith on the participants’ coping patterns will be explored. Data from the 2017 follow up study currently in progress will be described to show how the participants’ coping patterns changed over time. Specific clinical recommendations will be provided.

Paradox of Female Chastity: Re-working Bengali Ramayana

Saumitra Chakravarty, National College Basavanagudi, Bangalore, India

This paper attempts to analyze the paradoxical concept of "satiwra" (female chastity) in the fifteenth century Bengali Ramayana of Krittivasa. He shows how "satiwra," a construct of patriarchy emerging out of the gender stereotyping within the inner quarters of the home to which women were confined, is a double-edged weapon. While subjugating a woman to the andro-centric value system, the strict observance of "satiwra" paradoxically empowers her with a spiritual energy that protects her against its violators. The destructive potential of a sati’s curse can have the explosive power to incinerate the world, rendering gods, sages, kings and demons ineffective, thus striking at the very roots of patriarchy. This is shown through three women—Seeta, Rama’s wife, the monkey queen Tara, whose husband Rama unjustly kills, and Mandodari, the demoness Queen of Lanka, who loses everything in the epic war with Rama. The last two may be categorised as women from the marginalized sections of society. By offering the subaltern’s perspective on the epic war and the warrior’s code of honour, Krittivasa goes beyond Valmiki’s deification of Rama as the ideal man and king.

Political Islam: Case of Justice and Development Party in Turkey versus Gulen Movement

Recep Dogan, Wisdom College, Calamvale, Australia

Islam has been interpreted by individuals since its birth and Political Islam is one of them. Scholars have identified some of its interpretations as extreme due to their consequences and negative effects on Muslims and others. Political Islam has a long history and the Justice and Development Party (the AKP) is a new face of it in 21st Century. The main goal to write this essay is defining political Islam, especially in the personality of the Justice and Development Party and compare its Islam to Gulen Movement’s one. Although the AKP has long benefited from the valuable support of Fethullah Gulen and his followers in the way of democratizing the state and its institutions the two allies have clearly separated from each other since 2013 maybe a little bit earlier. This separation has created a massive impact on Muslims as well as on other people. Due to a great polarization, hatred and enmity between the two groups and its huge effect on society it has become a necessity to analyze Islam and its interpretation by these two groups.

Study and Social Formation of the Early Rabbinic Movement

Jack N. Lightstone, Brock University, St. Catharines, Ontario, Canada

This paper's analysis aims to support two interrelated claims. First, Mishnah study with others functioned as a key element in the social formation of the early rabbinic group in the Land of Israel c. 200 CE. Second, the pervasive literary and rhetorical traits of Mishnah served to define the core expertise and consequently the core identity characteristic of members of the early rabbinic movement. The formation of the early rabbinic group and the role of group study in that process represents an interesting case of the emergence of a guild of religious virtuosi and authorities. They claimed their virtuosity and authority not on the basis of lineage, caste, class, or charismatic or spiritual gifts, as had been the norm in Ancient Judaism and Israelite religion and society, but on the basis of an acquired, defined expertise.

New Religious Leadership: How Religious Diversity and Social Change Affect Today's Clergy

Austin Tiffany, University of Cambridge, Cambridge, Cambridgeshire, United Kingdom

This sociological study investigates how social change has reshaped the role of clergy and granted them more authority in religious life, especially when compared to religious institutions, such as seminaries. Research was conducted through qualitative interviews with Jewish and Christian clergy and seminary faculty in New York City and London between 2016-2017. As institutions, seminaries are sluggish to adapt to new demands in religious life, whereas clergy retain greater amounts of autonomy to contextualize religion into a lived reality. This has granted the space for clergy, not the theological ivory towers of seminaries, to possess the religious authority to engage in the public square and respond to societal issues – namely poverty, homelessness, and toxic political environments. Clergy achieve this by forming institutional partnerships across lines of religious difference. This is done through social action, faith based community organizing, and the forging of unlikely alliances around specific causes. Underlying all of this, new theologies of engagement with the religious other are being developed, challenging the presumed authority of seminaries and reshaping the role of religion in public life.

Prismatic Intersections of European, African, and Indigenous Spiritual Beliefs
Kevin Kelly Cooke, University of Puerto Rico, San Juan, Puerto Rico

People generally consider Puerto Rican Spiritism to be one practice, but it consists of multiple forms that hold several core beliefs. However, outside of these core beliefs, there are many differences in goals, practices, and even iconography. This essay will give a brief overview of the five forms of Puerto Rican Spiritism, Kardecian Espiritismo, Trinidismo, The Spiritist Church movement, Espiritismo con Santeria, and Mesa Blanca Spiritism.

Additionally explored is the evolution of Mesa Blanca Spiritism and how it has evolved with the closings of the Spiritist centers. These changes include the appropriation of icons, practices, and beliefs from non-Western religions. The essay also includes excerpts of interviews with mediums as well as photos, descriptions, and the significance of appropriated items on home alters.

Notion of Spirituality among DLSU Graduate Students: A Revalidation of WHOQOL SRPB Assessment Tool
James Emerson Mañez, De La Salle University, Mandaluyong, Philippines

The religious experiences among Black and White Americans are not uniform or monolithic. Blacks often report higher levels of religious engagement than Whites. And among Blacks, African Americans are more likely to be members of a religious institution and participate in more religious activities than Caribbean Americans. Religion can arguably be a defining component of Black American culture. In addition, racial discrimination remains a challenge for Blacks. Clearly, discrimination, racial or religious, is a part of United States’ culture. We examined the role of religious coping and perceived discrimination on hypertension in a sample of African American, Caribbean American and White Seventh-day Adventist (SDA). We found after adjusting for race/ethnicity, socioeconomic status, gender and health behaviors, perceptions of discrimination predicted hypertension for both White and Black adults. In addition, positive religious coping predicted lower odds of hypertension. For SDA African and Caribbean Americans, race was their primary source of discrimination. For White SDAs, religion was their primary source of discrimination. Our results add to the growing literature on the harmful effects of discrimination and the beneficial effects of religion on reducing cardiovascular risk for White and Black adults.

The Mormon Reformation: Working Through Community Dissonance
Austin Cary, Brigham Young University, Rexburg, Idaho, United States

Often evangelistic faiths feel the tension of propagating their theologies despite the possibility, and even the obvious probability of creating dissonance within their communities. This tension was precisely what the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints experienced during the Mormon Reformation of 1856-57. It has been framed by historians as a time of fiery sermons delivered by Brigham Young, Jedediah Grant, and other high ranking officials demanding their members to conform to a particularly stringent religious lifestyle. Those willing to respond were re-baptized as a symbol of their “reformation,” while those who refused were excommunicated. This tension led to unsettled dissonance. Through the years, historians of the Mormon Reformation have debated obsessively over the same controversial issues while failing to examine what effects, if any, this “reformation” had on proselytizing efforts worldwide. Even missiologists have overlooked these effects in their publications. A post-reformation decline in convert baptism “reformation,” while those who refused were excommunicated. This tension led to unsettled dissonance. Through the years, historians of the Mormon Reformation have debated obsessively over the same controversial issues while failing to examine what effects, if any, this “reformation” had on proselytizing efforts worldwide. Even missiologists have overlooked these effects in their publications. A post-reformation decline in convert baptism was able to sustain growth throughout the remainder of the nineteenth century. This study is based on data drawn from primary source materials not previously examined in this regard. Particularly interesting is this paper’s original contribution to the corpus of literature in relation to both the Mormon Reformation and mission studies from the perspective of the lay ministry.

The Community of Santo Domingo: A Church for Spanish Immigrants in Puebla, Mexico, 1904-1994
Alfonso Gomez-Rossi, Instituto Universitario Boulanger, Puebla, Mexico

From 1880 to the 1930s many Spaniards from Asturias, with lesser contingents of immigrants from Cantabria, Galicia and the Basque Country arrived to the city of Puebla, Mexico. The Archdiocese promoted that the Order of Preacher’s from Andalucía tend to the spiritual needs of the immigrants and Mexicans throughout the twentieth century (1904-93). The Church of Santo Domingo helped the Spanish community transition to the realities of Puebla through the administration of the Catholic sacraments, participation of feasts and devotion to the Saints that reaffirmed an Iberian Catholicism. The Dominicans, as a Mendicant Order, also offered the laity a possibility to join their ranks through the tertiaries (later known as Lay Dominicans) who participated with the Order in the celebration of the mass reinforcing, at the same time, a Spanish identity and spirituality.

The well-being of students is always an important feature of academic life. Recent studies have shown that spirituality, religious and personal beliefs significantly relate to the quality of life not only of students in particular but also of individuals in general (Baring et al, 2016; Hsien-Chuan Hsu et al, 2009). The present study is a revalidation of WHOQOL-SRPB assessment tool. We use the WHOQOL-SRPB assessment tool and conduct a survey of how 1,000 graduate students from a Manila-based Philippine University employ their notion of spirituality. We then use a follow-up interview to explore how they articulate meaning-making notions to justify their assessments. Results will then revalidate or invalidate the said assessment tool in a sample of African American, Caribbean American and White Seventh-day Adventist (SDA). Uptown Matrons, Downtown Daughters and Suburban Moms: Constructing Jewish-American Femininity through the Kitchen

Mara Steinitz, Macalester College, Saint Paul, Minnesota, United States

English language Jewish cookbooks published in the United States between 1900 and 1950 highlight the tremendous changes in both Jewish American life and the life of women in the United States more broadly. Functioning as manuals for Jewish women across geographic and class spectrums, these books reveal how the behavioral expectations placed upon Jewish women changed dramatically over time and were influenced by both religious and mainstream societal gender norms. The texts provide evidence of the difficulties faced in creating a Jewish-American identity and reconciling tensions between religious tradition and secular society. The Jewish cookbooks published during the first half of the 20th century tended to fall into two main categories of focus, either pushing assimilation or attempting to strengthen Judaism in America. However, as all Jewish people became more Americanized and moved into the middle class, concerns over loss of Jewish identity and tradition moved to the forefront of the concerns. In both cases, the books constructed women as responsible for their family’s values and relationships to both American and Jewish identities. Therefore, though all of the books asserted that women’s femininity derived from a focus on domestic labor in or out of their homes and expected that they would use food as a means for the maintenance of cultural values, they also differed based on factors such as class and geographic origin, thus proving the necessity of an expanded use of intersectionality in historical studies of gender and religion.

Image of God among Children of Overseas Filipino Worker Parents: Opportunities for Theology of Migration

Philip Joseph Sarmiento, Holy Angel University, Angeles, Philippines

If parents are not living with their children because of migration especially in the Asian situation, will their children's image of God be affected? This paper aims to highlight the image of God with the stories of four (4) children of Overseas Filipino Worker (OFW) parents who are not living with them since childhood. The paper employed the see-judge-act method to understand the experiences of the key informants through personal interviews. Their stories show the struggles and difficulties of these children who live away with their parents and yet they are able to develop their own image of God. Though these children are highly affected by migration, their experiences are rich potential sources for theological reflection on how they make meaning with their situation. Findings of the paper present potential opportunities to develop a theology of migration and further discussions on the implications to Christianity in Asia.

Pentecostal-Charismatic Megachurches in the Philippines

Dr. Joel Tejedo, Baguio City, Benguet, Philippines

There are many misconceptions over Pentecostal megachurches in the Philippines. They are often perceived as advocates of the prosperity theology and thus motivated by financial gain while their charismatic leaders are viewed by the popular media as individuals with a messiah complex because of the strong leadership demonstrate over their congregations and prominent role they play in the society. This paper explores the growth of Pentecostal megachurches in the Philippines and their innovative indigenisation of the Christian faith as well as the influence of their Western counterparts. It begins with a review of the contemporary scholarship which has informed in the field and proceeds to identify the major Pentecostal megachurches which have been at the forefront of reinventing Christian witness in the Philippine society. It will offer two case studies of Pentecostal megachurches to examine their historical development, links to the poor and the middle class, networks, locations in the political landscape, doctrine of prosperity, and the form of their social and civic engagement. In doing so, this chapter seeks to answer the following questions: How have Pentecostal megachurches developed and what attracts the masses to attend them? What form of civic engagement do they play in indigenising gospel messages in the Philippine society?

| Go Rebuild My Church: Transforming the Roman Catholic Church from Within using Sociological Tools and a Franciscan Framework
Sarah Kohles, Sister of St. Francis, St. Francis, Wisconsin, United States
Despite their natural resistance to change, large institutions like the Roman Catholic Church do change. This paper explores a practical method for transforming the institution of the Roman Catholic Church by ordinary people from the position of inside of the institution. This is achieved by the use of a Franciscan vision that has found resonance in Pope Francis and is supported by the sociological concept of frame alignment theory (Christian Smith). Peter Berger and Thomas Luckmann’s work on marginality demonstrates that people’s everyday experiences that do not fit into the reality put forth by the institution are threatening to that institution and are the greatest opportunities for change. There are many people who do not fit within the official framework of the teaching of the Catholic Church – women, LGBTQ, couples who use birth control— to name a few. Many of these people respond to the Church’s marginalization of their experiences by leaving. However, I suggest using Robert Putnam’s bonding and bridging groups in order to support Catholics who remain within the structure of the Catholic Church, as well as those who do not. Also, I put forth the strategy of education regarding marginal experiences as a controversial way forward that inherently engenders political opportunities for transformation. This is demonstrated by the experience of Catholic Sisters in the United States and their recent conflict with the Vatican. Education and political opportunities have the potential to increase the number of people who remain within the Church and expanding what Tricia Colleen Bruce calls “embeddedness,” which allows for the greatest possibility for change within the institution of the Catholic Church. The Franciscan framing allows for a worldview that is both alternative and canonical (i.e. within) the Catholic Church and yields a practical, and realistic vision for transformation.

Between a Juridical Rock and a Pastoral Hard Place: The Problem of Divorce and Remarriage in the Roman Catholic Tradition
Frank Harrington, University of Central Lancashire, Preston, England, United Kingdom
There is an apparent dissonance between the juridical and pastoral roles of the Roman Catholic Church in issues relating to divorce and remarriage. The way the Church exercises its juridical power over the faithful seems to be in direct conflict with the declared aims of its pastoral responsibility toward them. The church has been in a period of change under the papacy of Francis I, with a "power-struggle" for dominance between conservative members who wish to uphold the letter of the law, and more progressive members who wish to see the church treat those in second marriages with a greater degree of mercy and compassion. This paper draws together a range of possible solutions which have previously been rejected by the Church. It will discuss whether the newly explored "Theology of Mercy" proposed by Francis I, Kasper and others, combined with a new understanding of the sacrament of penance, another exploration of the "internal forum" solution first proposed in the 1970s, an exploration of the Orthodox concept of will discuss whether the newly explored "Theology of Mercy" proposed by Francis I, Kasper and others, combined with a new understanding of the sacrament of penance, another exploration of the "internal forum" solution first proposed in the 1970s, an exploration of the Orthodox concept of Oikonomia" and discussions on what constitutes indissolubility by Thatcher and others, enable a re-description of the pastoral response of clergy towards divorced/remarried Catholics, not as exceptional practice, but within the mainstream doctrine of the church.

Room 3: Being, Liberation, and Politics
Post-Secular Return of Religion: A Religion of Being-for-the-Other
Rogi Thomas, University of Dundee, Dundee, Scotland, United Kingdom
Secularism in conventional understanding involves a strict separation of the state from religious institutions. It ensures that religious groups do not impede affairs of the state. Equally it also makes sure that the state does not interfere in religious affairs. In this respect, post-modernity offers a paradigm shift in the hermeneutical understanding of the conception of secular and religion. This would entail Post-Secular Return of Religion: A Religion of Being-for-the-Other which will be the crux of my argument. I argue for the hermeneutical recovery of the divine after the death of the metaphysical God. (3) It would be wrong to identify this hermeneutical recovery of God with a dimension of an individual belief system, something contained and concealed by it. Finally, God is not seen as a being outside the universe, but within, being a potential promise present in language, culture, and in human lives, maturing the creature’s createdness. It enables the self to realize its own being and of the other and thus to-be-for-the-other. Being-for-the-other is inevitable because the hermeneutic rediscovery of religion and sacred is (should be) primarily aimed at human flourishing and the real existence of the whole of creation, man and beast alike. This post-secular return of religion as ‘being-for-the-other’ envisages a pluralistic community which rejuvenates social discourse, practices of economic development, and new ecological policies within democratic countries. The paper will explain these implications in detail.

Trading Futures: Theology at the Eschaton of Financial Capitalism
Filipe Maia, Pacific School of Religion, Berkeley, California, United States
The purpose of this paper is to offer a theological critique of financialized capitalism that is methodologically aligned with liberative readings of the Christian theological tradition. The paper draws from the insights of Latin American liberation theologians who, since the 1970s, rejected the Weberian proposal that capitalism is a secularized version of Calvinist Protestantism to suggest, rather, that capitalism is an "idolatrous" economic system that produces wealth at the expenses of the "sacrifices" of the poor and exploited classes. I will be suggesting that this idolatrous structure is reflected on the ways in which contemporary finance engenders a vision of the future that justifies and validates detrimental economic policies and structures in the present. The identification of contemporary capitalist financial markets with a particular eschatological register will allow me to articulate a counter-eschatological discourse that challenges the hegemony of future-talk as performed in financial discourse. This proposal, I believe, will contribute to conversation under the proposed theme of "religious foundations," particular on the topic of "world destinations: religious and secular eschatologies."

Ninth International Conference on Religion & Spirituality in Society

Founded in 2011, the International Conference on Religion and Spirituality in Society brings scholars, teachers and practitioners together to reflect on the relationships of religion and spirituality to society. The conference aims to provide a space for careful, scholarly reflection and open dialogue.

We invite proposals for paper presentations, workshops/interactive sessions, posters/exhibits, colloquia, innovation showcases, virtual posters, or virtual lightning talks.

Returning Member Registration
We are pleased to offer a Returning Member Registration Discount to delegates who have attended the Religion in Society Conference in the past. Returning research network members receive a discount off the full conference registration rate.
